Audience to see fire, rain at Homecoming

Cameo appearance:
Mickey to perform in show, parade, game

Umbrellas and fire extinguishers may be recommended to those attending this year's Homecoming Spectacular, which will feature everything from a rainstorm to a fire-knife dance.

Presented at the Marriott Center Saturday evening at 7:30, the show will introduce this year's theme, "Echoes of Truth."

Once part of the old Fieldhouse Frolics, which was essentially a student talent show, the Spectacular became one of the oldest traditions of Homecoming, said Carri Jenkins, executive member of the Homecoming Committee.

The entertainment for the evening includes a Polynesian segment with Chief Sielu from the Polynesian Cultural Center, who will perform a fire-knife dance, and former BYU student Taran Erickson McQuivey.

Also performing are the Concert Choir, Men's and Women's choruses, the Young Ambassadors and a singers and dancer who will perform to "Singin' in the Rain." Special guest Mickey Mouse will perform with the Chamber Orchestra.

Anyone visiting Disneyland this weekend will be disappointed since Disneyland's own Mickey Mouse will spend this weekend at BYU. Clyn Barrus and the Chamber Orchestra will introduce the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" sequence from "Fantasia" with an appearance and speech from the famous mouse.

Ron Clark, an executive member of the Homecoming Committee and director of public affairs and customer relations, is responsible for bringing Mickey to BYU. Described by coworkers as "the Disney official," when Clark heard the Homecoming Committee was looking for a mouse, he decided only the original would do.

Another guest is Chief Sielu coming from the Polynesian Cultural Center in Hawaii. Sielu will present a fire-knife dance and will perform with former BYU student Taran Erickson McQuivey. McQuivey has sung with Don Ho in Honolulu since she was eight, and has done extensive television work and released a compact disc.

One of her numbers, "Voyage to Paradise," will be performed with Chief Sielu and BYU's Living Legends (formerly Lamanite Generation). During the Polynesian section of the performance, 15-foot tikis and torches will add to the set and lighting design.

"We have designed each aspect of the show to have splashy, exciting elements," said artistic director Janielle Christensen.

The audience will see just how serious those splashy elements are in a special song and dance number, "Singin' in the Rain," complete

In celebration of President David O. McKay and in memory of his involvement with the Polynesian islands, this year's Homecoming Spectacular features two entertainers from Hawaii — singer Taran Erickson McQuivey and fire-knife dancer, Chief Sielu Avea.

President McKay, during his time as a prophet went on numerous tours of Polynesian missions, dedicated the New Zealand temple, presented the dedicatory address at the church's colleges in Hawaii and New Zealand, established the first overseas stake in Auckland, New Zealand.

He was also a part of the planning and building of the Polynesian Cultural Center in Laie, Hawaii, according to Carri Jenkins, publicity representative of the Homecoming Executive Committee.

Avea, a Samoan who recently returned from a tour of Russia, Poland and Germany is a featured performer and lecturer at the cultural center. His fire-knife dance was originally performed only for royalty, according to Avea. The dance did not incorporate the fire element until he began performing it at night.

Avea's ceremonial title of chief required him to endure the process of tattooing his lineage on his body.

The tattooing process took seven days of 12-hour sessions to complete.

According to Avea people have died due to infection and immense pain during the tattooing ceremony.

McQuivey, a former BYU student, will sing "When You Wish Upon a Star," and "Come Become," a song about the islands of Tonga, Samoa and Hawaii. Though not Hawaiian, McQuivey was raised in Hawaii and has been singing at the Don Ho show in Hawaii since she was eight. McQuivey said that Ho's show is very intimate and that he often calls audience members up to the stage to participate.

Once when she was in attendance of Ho's show he called her up to sing. McQuivey sang "Tomorrow," from Annie, and "You Light Up My Life," and Ho has invited her back ever since.

McQuivey also has an album out titled, "All That I Am," which includes five cover songs, five original songs and a duet with Don Ho. McQuivey described her music as contemporary pop inspirational music. She said her style was similar to Barbara Streisand and Karen Carpenter.

First Homecoming in 1893 — minus football

By KATRINA GULSTAD
Universe Staff Writer

Fun, dancing and football have long been associated with BYU's Homecoming, but a few of the past traditions will only live on in the fading yearbook pages of the canyon.

Homecoming is quite different now than it used to be," said Dave Barrett, director of alumni activities and regional affairs.

Many of the activities that have remained through the years include the lighting of the "Y," the dances and the parade. The festivities have focused on the meaning of homecoming, the welcoming back of former students.

"Homecoming was a great experience for me," said Taran Collett, 1931-32 BYU student body president. "I don't know if I still have roots in Provo because of the homecoming I had at the Y."

The first Homecoming was in 1893, but it did not include a football game because BYU did not have a team. Known as Founder's Day, the first Homecoming invited alumni to return to campus for a variety of activities," Barrett said.

Students participated in hikes, food festivals and several other activities in the annual celebration held Oct. 16.

In 1920 the Cougars were born. BYU had its first homecoming football game the following year. Like now, students sported their blue and white to cheer the team, but the day ended with the game.

According to a 1930 edition of The Y News, an early BYU publication, BYU caught its first glimpse of current Homecoming festivities in November 1930. Homecoming activities that year included a rally dance, theater pep program and midnight football rally broadcast over KSL radio station.

The dance was an informal mixer in the ladies' gymnasium with "novel stunts and ideas," said The Y News article. Students were led to the theater by the university band and for 50 cents were entertained with a pep rally and a movie.

The Cougars started a winning tradition that year, beating the Montana State Bobcats 19-6. BYU did not, however, beat the University of Utah in a Homecoming game until 1943, former student body president Collett said.

"I remember it well because I was in the war at the time, stationed at a Navy base at Long Beach," Collett said.

One thing that has also remained constant is BYU's rivalry with the U of U. "We built floats the year I was student body president and had a whole caravan that went to the U of U for a game," Collett said. "When we got there the U of U students tore our decorations apart."

In the 1950s and 60s, BYU Homecoming featured a songfest where student groups would write and perform songs on campus, Alumni Activities Director Barrett said. This was the beginning of the current Homecoming Spectacular.

"Most of the traditions of the 1950s to 1970s era have kind of passed by the board," Barrett said. "It is much more modern now."

BYU Homecoming has evolved into a week-long, theme-oriented celebration.

ROW, ROW, ROW YOUR FLOAT: Floats from several different departments and clubs across campus will parade around the BYU campus Saturday morning. Thomas Weaver, a graduate student from St. George, and Eric Stevens, from Orem, both civil engineering majors, are constructing an engineering float. See a related story on page 3.

161 Kurdish rebels die in clash with Turkey

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkish troops reportedly have killed 161 Kurdish rebels in three days of fighting.

The most intensive clashes occurred along the Iraqi border, where 118 rebels and 11 soldiers died, according to official figures. The Anatolia news agency reported today that the border clashes began Saturday.

Turkey is trying to maintain a security zone in northern Iraq to prevent the rebels from staging cross-border attacks. To the north, 13 rebels died today in fighting near the central city of Sivas, the agency reported.

A government offensive there was launched in retaliation for a rebel ambush Saturday that killed four soldiers and wounded 17.

Thirty additional Kurdish rebels have died in fighting in other provinces. Fifteen Turkish soldiers have been killed in all.

Government jets and helicopter gunships reinforced troops in both operations.

The Kurdish rebels, who are seeking an autonomous state in Turkey's Kurdish-dominated southeast, have fought the government since 1984.

Alleged thief surrenders to 'Homicide' cops

BALTIMORE — The NBC police drama "Homicide" got a taste of real-life crime Monday when a suspected thief stumbled onto a set and surrendered to what he mistakenly thought were real cops.

The man, accused of stealing $100 worth of film from a drug store, was fleeing the store's security guard when he turned a corner and came upon a street full of actors dressed like police officers. He dropped the film and said "Uh, oh."

"He ... thought he ran into a nest of cops, but he ran into a nest of TV cops," actor Clark Johnson said.

A security guard for the show grabbed the suspect and the real police arrived shortly after.

"The judge should dismiss the charges because he was punished with humiliation," actor Richard Belzer said. "He shouldn't do any time because he looked like a total jerk."

Added Terrill Lawrence, the drug store's security guard: "He was really embarrassed. I would have been embarrassed too."

Family receives gifts; stolen money replaced

ROY — Don't try to tell Nancy Carter that nobody cares.

Last week, a man with a knife forced Carter's husband, Neil, to withdraw $500 from the family's Christmas savings account. On Monday, America First Credit Union replaced the money.

"America First has made such a wonderful, sweet gesture," Nancy Carter said. "But, it's more than just that. We've had so much love and care shown to us."

One person mailed them $40 and another sent Christmas gifts for the children. In addition, school children dropped off balloons and candy, and friends have called to make sure the Carters are okay.

Randy Lee Taylor, 29, of Roy, is accused of kidnapping Neil Carter and two of the couple's five children on Oct. 3 and holding them for two hours before they were released unharmed.

Police arrested Taylor at an Ogden residence the next day, but they recovered only $30. Taylor is being held in the Weber County Jail without bail. He was arraigned Monday in 2nd District Court on five charges that all carry possible life sentences — three counts of aggravated kidnapping and two counts of aggravated robbery.

Utah company contracts $9 million Navy job

PARK CITY — Geared Systems Inc. has received a contract for almost $9 million to build 126 aircraft-mounted accessory drives for F-A-18 planes.

Rep. Bill Orton, D-Utah, announced the Navy contract on Monday.

"I am proud of the contribution Geared Systems Inc. and its 300 employees are making to our nation's defense as well as the economic development of Park City, Summit County and all of Utah," he said.

Last year, Geared System's former parent company, Lucas Western, pleaded guilty to 37 counts of submitting false statements about defective gearboxes and was fined $18.5 million.

The company also agreed later to pay an $88 million civil fine to settle a False Claims Act lawsuit.

Mountain bike race tackles trail Thursday

The 1996 "Echoes of Truth" Homecoming mountain bike race will start at the bottom of Y Mountain (straight up 1820 North) on Provo Bench Trail Thursday at 4 p.m.

Registration is $10, and all proceeds go toward prizes and event-related expenses. Registration is open at Bike Worx, located at 685 E. 300 South in Provo, or at 3 p.m., before the race starts, at the bottom of Y Mountain.

There will be men's and women's beginner, sport and advanced categories for the estimated 90 participants expected for the annual Homecoming event, said Vernon Stout, former BYU student and owner of Bike Worx. The first heat will start at 4 p.m., followed by the men's sport and advanced heat at 4:30 p.m.

Ryun Noble, a sophomore from Provo majoring in English, jumped at the opportunity for his employer, Bike Worx, to get involved.

"At BYU we are situated in some of the world's top-rated cycling areas. We have the Rocky Mountains with an endless maze of trails right in our backyard, ski resorts that are mountain bike-friendly ... and Moab is just a few hours away. Everyone should take advantage of it," Noble said.

Other highlights will include an appearance by the Provo High School cheerleaders, and Miss Utah, Natalie Pearson.

The Grand Marshall for the parade will be local entrepreneur Alan Ashton, grandson of David O. McKay.

This year's Homecoming festivities will be a tribute to President McKay and his focus on educational excellence. The parade will reflect this year's chosen Homecoming theme, "Echoes of Truth."

President Merrill J. Bateman and Sister Bateman will also participate in the parade's unique motorcade.

Portions of 900 East and 800 North will be inaccessible to motorists during the parade.

The Spectacular will also pay tribute to former prophet David O. McKay and "focus on his values of love and truth," said Christensen. The theme for Homecoming, "Echoes of Truth," was chosen in honor of President McKay.

"We thought it was appropriate," said Jenkins, "because of the many truths President McKay gave us." Jenkins used President McKay's quote, "No success can compensate for failure in the home," as an example.

"Truths like that stay with us," Jenkins said. The Polynesian numbers are also part of the tribute to President McKay, who gave much service to the Polynesian people. Jenkins said the Homecoming Committee did quite a bit of research to learn about President McKay and how to best honor his accomplishments.

They learned that President McKay dedicated the New Zealand temple; opened the Church College of Hawaii, which is now BYU-Hawaii; opened the first overseas stake, in New Zealand; and was key in the opening of the Polynesian Cultural Center.

"He was legendary on the islands with members and non-members alike," Jenkins said. "People would leave their homes and businesses to hear him speak."

Tickets for the Homecoming Spectacular can be purchased at the Marriott Center Ticket Office. Below concourse is $8, above concourse $7.

Janet Lee to speak at Saturday night fireside

Bringing Homecoming Week to a spiritual close, there will be a BYUSA fireside by Janet Griffin Lee Sunday night at 7 in the de Jong Concert Hall.

Lee, the wife of former BYU president Rex E. Lee, will follow the theme of Homecoming, "Echoes of Truth," said a secretary from the Alumni Association.

Recently, Lee co-authored the book, "Marathon of Faith," which deals with the challenges her family faced during the years her husband battled cancer and other health problems.

As an elementary school teacher, Lee created reading and phonics programs that were used by the school system where she taught.

Lee has served as a Young Women's president and as a teacher in the Young Women's, Relief Society and Primary organizations in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Alumni available as mentors at annual Career Connections

By BRENT HALL
Universe Staff Writer

More than sixty professionals, including inventors, movie producers and government officials, will be available Friday morning for one-on-one discussions with interested students as part of the BYU Alumni Association "Career Connections" program.

The annual event, held in conjunction with Homecoming festivities, allows students to visit with BYU alumni who have excelled in their respective professional fields.

Undergraduates, as well as graduate students, are invited to register for available 15-minute time slots with interested mentors this week in the Alumni House.

"We have something for everyone," Ida Smith, administrator of alumni and student programs said. "Freshmen or undecided majors can benefit from these sessions as well as seniors or graduate students who need advice about networking or interviewing for that first job."

Although the program can be useful for students searching for careers, the sessions will not be for job interviewing.

"This is an opportunity for students to learn more about professionals in their chosen field of study," Smith said. "This is not an opportunity for employment, nor do we want it to be. It's just a very unique experience for students to visit with some proven examples of success."

The program is in its 13th year and continues to grow because of the caliber of its participants. Gifford Neilson, former BYU and professional quarterback and current sports anchor for KHOU-TV in Houston; Tracy Hall, patent agent, chemist and inventor of cubic zirconium; and Olene Walker, lieutenant governor of Utah, are all planning to be in attendance. Professionals who participate in the program do so free of charge, and in many cases, at great personal expense.

"These people come from all over the country, and are generous to do so," Smith said. "But the experience is really for the students. I had a participant come to me one year and say that the 15-minute session he spent here changed the course of his life."

Although doctors, lawyers and businesspersons will be the most prevalent professionals available to students through the program, most all BYU majors will be represented.

Participating professionals will be available for student consultations from 8 a.m. to noon Friday in the Garden Court of the Wilkinson Center.

Dorm decorating still a Homecoming tradition

Halls decorate walls with yodelers, trees

By MARY L. OTIS
Universe Staff Writer

It's Homecoming time again, and along with that tradition comes another one familiar to all who have lived on campus at BYU: the dorm decorating contest.

Students living in Deseret Towers, Helaman Halls and Heritage Halls are participating in the contest by decorating the lobbies of their halls. Judging is based on creativity, use of color and originality.

The contest begins Thursday at noon, according to Christy Lewis, executive director of campus life at BYUSA. Three winners — one from Deseret Towers, Helaman Halls and Heritage Halls — will receive a pizza party hosted by BYUSA officers.

Liz Darger, hall president for Taylor Hall in Helaman Halls, said they are going for a mountain motif in their lobby. Keeping with the theme "Echoes of Truth," the windows and walls of the hall will be decorated with yodelers and mountain climbers, Darger said.

Also, the hall will display a speaker, symbolizing the prophet echoing truth to the world.

Shipp Hall in Heritage Halls is trying to keep their decorating to more of a Homecoming-theme style, according to Hall President April Bruns.

They plan on putting up a Christmas-type tree Homecoming and Halloween decorations and then place bells up to truth."

Taking advantage of the break between conference sessions, students of Shipp Hall got together to decorate and coordinate ideas together, Bruns said.

Tradition of lighting Y dates back to 1923

Fiery lanterns originally used

By EMILY CHAMBERLAIN
Universe Staff Writer

Y Mountain remains a cherished symbol of Homecoming Week.

The lighting of the Y dates back to 1923 when it was originally lit with mattress stuffing and case oil.

Mike Nielson, parliamentarian and sergeant of arms of the Intercollegiate Knights said many students don't realize the effort that goes into lighting the Y.

"The lighting of the Y is a tradition. There is a group and we do it," he said.

Lynn Edwards, adviser for the Intercollegiate Knights and chief engineer of KBYU explained how the Y was originally lit:

"In the early days of the lighting of the Y, the all-male Intercollegiate Knights used mattress stuffing and case oil to make burning lanterns around the Y.

The lanterns were prepared on the rodeo grounds — the present day intramural fields. The lanterns were carried up to the Y in five-gallon buckets by Intercollegiate Knight pages, the newest members of the group.

"Balls of mattress stuffing and oil were placed around the Y and lit to illuminate the mountain. The glory only lasted about one hour."

Because society became more environmentally conscious and the Forest Service no longer wanted fires to be lit on the mountain, an alternative lighting system came into use.

"On Oct. 11, 1985 (the night of the Homecoming Bonfire), a group of seven pages lit the Y for the first time using lights and a generator purchased by the university," according to the Y history written by the Intercollegiate Knights.

Today, the Y is lit about 5 times a year using 140 lights powered by a generator, Edwards said. The lights are each in a plastic shield, and are strung together with a thick electrical cord.

Nielson, also a Spanish teaching major, is in charge of organizing a group of people to light the Y and to assign 15 to 20 club members to guard the Y during the week.

Nielson said they work with the BYU grounds crew to make sure the lights and generator are working. The Y is watched by IK members to make sure everything runs safely and to ensure the light bulbs are not stolen.

During the Homecoming Week, club members watch the Y from a bunker situated on the side of the mountain in two hour shifts. The club members protect the Y and answer questions curious hikers ask. Even at night, members stay watch to make sure all is well.

Members of the Intercollegiate Knights take several hours out of their busy schedules to make sure the Y is lit.

"It's more than just turning on a switch," said Kali Erickson, senior in conservation biology and vice president of the Intercollegiate Knights.

To abide by BYU housing rules and for safety, "ladies are not allowed to stay overnight," said Mike Rowberry, sociology major and president of the Intercollegiate Knights.

Friday, the Intercollegiate Knights will have their newest members light the Y, one bulb at a time. All are invited to attend.

For more information, call Mike Rowberry at 343-2572 or Brian Fowlers at 226-1442.

YOU LIGHT UP MY Y: Laying down strings of lights in preparation for Homecoming, Mike Rowberry, president of the Intercollegiate Knights, continues the tradition. Members of the club light the Y about five times each year and guard the lights 24-hours a day, staying in a bunker near by.

the Polynesian culture. The Homecoming Spectacular will feature Chief Sielu from the Polynesian Cultural Center, and the annual barbecue will be in luau fashion.

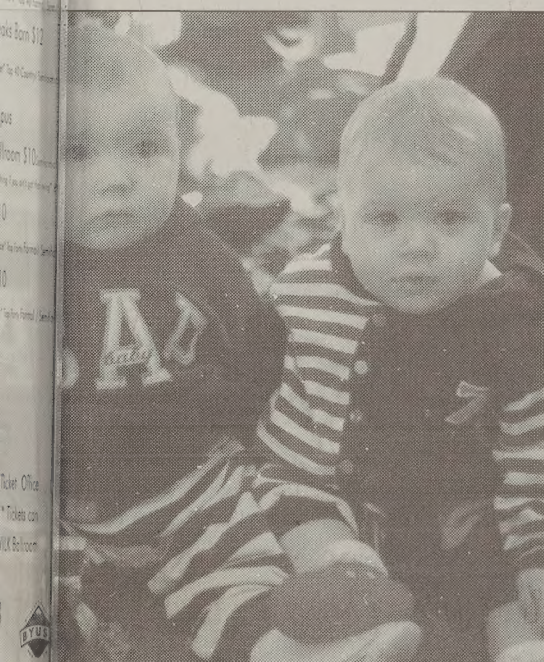

Randall said President McKay was a believer in an education that provided students with skills for life. He wanted students to broaden their principles and develop character. According to Randall, President McKay felt everyone had the right to receive an education.

Education was very important in the McKay family. President McKay's mother inherited $2,500 and decided to use this inheritance to provide her children with a college education. President McKay continued his education efforts throughout his lifetime. He had a great impact on the Sunday School program in the church and developed several teaching manuals for it.

FEEL THE RHYTHM: Though perhaps not as practiced as these members of the dance company, Homecoming dancers will have the option of six different locations and music styles to groove to both Friday and Saturday night.

Homecoming Committee continues college tradition

By ERIKA TIMM WILDE
Universe Staff Writer

Students, faculty and staff make up BYU's Homecoming Committee, a group that works an entire school year to pull off one week's events — ranging from a baby contest to a symposium featuring President Boyd K. Packer.

The Homecoming Committee will take a one-month break before resuming planning for next year's homecoming activities, said Carri Jenkins of BYU Public Communications and a member of the Homecoming Executive Committee.

"It's really a huge project," Jenkins said. "But BYU is dedicated to the Homecoming tradition. Some schools are dropping Homecoming — we're not one of them."

The Homecoming Committee consists of two groups. The executive committee is made up of a diverse group of faculty and staff. This committee, headed by George H. Bowie, assistant adviser to the vice president of University Relations, includes representatives from grounds, scheduling and campus departments.

The group's diverse design is no accident; it is planned that way for efficiency. "We can handle a lot of issues in one hour," said Jenkins, who handles the promotions for the committee.

The second half of the Homecoming Committee is made up of student representatives from BYUSA. Headed by Christine Lewis, a senior from Sandy, and Dani Davis, a sophomore from Sandy also, the BYUSA Homecoming Committee does all the planning and organizing of the student activities.

Committee

Davis said she is pleased with the dedication of the volunteers who help run the student activities. "The people are really great. It's very time consuming, but I love it."

The BYUSA half of the Homecoming Committee has been working since June to organize student events such as the Pep Rally, the 3-on-3 basketball tournament and the Homecoming dances. Davis said the most difficult event to plan was the parade. "I've never done that before. Christy and I are most nervous about that event." She said all the events will be fun if students get involved.

"It's going to be a week you won't want to miss," Bowie said.

Homecoming weekend can be danced away

There will be six locations, both on and off campus, for toe-tapping, feet-squashing dancers to keep the beat during the Homecoming this year.

"This will be a great experience and lots of fun. Everyone should get involved and come," said Noel Challis, one of the 24 people on this year's Homecoming Dance Committee.

The dances will be Friday from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. and Saturday from 8 p.m. to 11:30.

This year's Homecoming theme is "Echoes of Truth," in honor of David O. McKay. The theme for all of the dances will be "Reflections."

On-campus dances cost $10, and the Ellsworth dance costs $7 for couples or $4 each. Off-campus dances vary in price from $10 to $14 per couple.

Campus dances on Friday will be held in various locations, including the ELWC Ballroom, the N. Eldon Tanner Building, and the Leo B. Ellsworth Meat and Livestock Center.

New this year is the Big Band Dance in the ELWC Ballroom. Big Band, under the direction of Kevin Rockwell, will be playing live, Challis said. Members of the band are all former BYU students.

The Swing Kids Club will also participate, and there will be real swing dancing, Lewis said. But people do not have to know how to swing dance to come, Challis assured.

At the Tanner Building Top 40 music will rock the house.

This is the first time a dance has been held in the Ellsworth Center. This casual dance is included in a special couple's package for Friday, which includes tickets to the barbecue and Homecoming Spectacular. The package can be purchased for $32 (above concourse seating at the Homecoming Spectacular) and $34 (below concourse) at the Marriott Center Ticket Office. Students will save $4-$5 by buying this package, said Christy Lewis, Executive Director over Homecoming. During the dance, a Polynesian Group will be playing and dancing as well.

Off-campus dances on Friday will be at the Seven Peaks Barn, the Springville Art Museum and the Chillon in Spanish Fork.

For country lovers, there will be country swinging at the Seven Peaks Barn in Provo. The theme of this dance is "After the Sunset" and will cost $10.

The formal dance at the Springville Art Museum will cost $10 per couple.

One of the most popular dances is the formal Chillon dance, which costs $14. Interested students should try to get tickets beforehand, Challis said. Carriage rides are included in the ticket price.

On Saturday there will not be a dance in the Ellsworth Center. Instead there will be a Top 40 dance in the Ezra Taft Benson Building. Other dances will still be held in the Ballroom (Big Band) and the Tanner Building (Top 40).

Off-campus dances on Saturday include the Springville Art Museum, and the Seven Peaks Barn. Instead of the Chillon, however, there will be a formal dance at the Provo Courthouse for $14.

"I am amazed that BYU is able to arrange these Homecoming dances," said Eric Hanson, a freshman from Germany majoring in vocal music. "I once arranged the Homecoming dance for a school with only 800 students, and I know what it takes," Hanson said.

Hanson already has a date and now looking forward to the dance Saturday. The Homecoming committee has been working on arranging dances since school started this year.

The committee had to get decorations, arrange tables and chairs, prepare the refreshments. They were picked through recommendations from previous years, Challis said.

Tickets will be sold beforehand at the Varsity Theater Ticket Office at the door.

Rewards offered for talented basketball teams

By MARK C. BROWN
Universe Sports Writer

Lace up your shoes, inflate your basketballs and come make some money at the Deseret Towers basketball courts during Homecoming Week.

Keeping in step with BYU Homecoming tradition, BYUSA is sponsoring a three-day three-on-three basketball tournament that started Tuesday and will last until Thursday, at the basketball courts between R-Hall and S-Hall at Deseret Towers. The tournament is open to both men and women.

"The tournament is held every year, usually at the Richards Building," said Dani Davis, Homecoming program director. "We are hoping for 50 girl teams and 50 guy teams, and we will play rain or shine."

The tournament will be strictly three-on-three, with each team guaranteed at least two games. "We will play 15 minute halves, and if they lose once, they will play again but in the losers bracket," Davis said.

The teams that come out victorious will be amply rewarded. For both men and women, first place is a $75 gift certificate to University Mall, second place a $60 gift certificate, and third place a $45 gift certificate.

The cost to register is $9 per team, which must be paid at the time of registration.

Faculty reflects on past Homecomings

Parades, dances and losing the football game

By ALECIA H. FINLINSON
Universe Staff Writer

Homecoming's "Echoes of Truth" awaken echoes of the past for BYU faculty.

Homecoming is a time for BYU alumni and student body to celebrate the school and reminisce about the past. Many BYU faculty members savor memorable dances, fabulous parades and thrilling football games from past homecomings.

"There really was a spirit of the 'Y' back then," said Don Norton, assistant professor of English. Homecoming was an entire campus social event. "There used to be what they called the social units. There were male units and female units. They had very fierce loyalties and they were a great force behind the Homecoming activities."

Homecoming dances often featured long gowns and lively hair-do's. "The queen business was a big deal on campus," Norton said. Photos of queens used to line the walls of the third floor of the Wilkinson Center.

Chantal Thompson, an associate chair in the French Department, recalls her first Homecoming at BYU, soon after she arrived here from France. She said, "I was invited to the Homecoming dance and the guy who picked me up had a big white box." In the box was a chrysanthemum corsage, a flower that symbolizes death in France.

"I think the key to remembering a Homecoming dance was if the relationship was long term afterwards," said Daryl Hague, an assistant lecturer in the Spanish Department.

"The parades used to be terrific," said Don Marshall, a professor of humanities and director of International Cinema. "It was a big, major parade. The social units made fabulous floats because they were so competitive."

Bill Swinyard, professor of business management and director of the Institute of Retail Management said, "I remember being on the float committee for the senior class. We built it on a 1950 Mercury. We cut the top off and we built a skirt around it about 10 feet."

He also recalls driving the float to Salt Lake City after the parade to store it. At the point of the mountain there were strong winds and the whole top of the float blew off.

Frank W. Fox, a professor of history, recalls his one experience of being in the Homecoming parade. "I forgot it was Homecoming. I was driving along in my car and there was a guy directing the traffic. I wound up in this place in the middle of the road where the whole Homecoming parade just kind of swirled around me. I sat in my car drumming my fingers on the steering wheel. All the kids had been my students so they were all smiling and snickering as they went past. I kind of felt like in a way I was part of the parade."

Parades and dances were not the only memories.

"The football game was incidental. We all sat there above the Richards Building and we 'always' lost 'all' football games," Norton said.

"We all had letterman jackets that were identical. We would sit there at the game and we wore our red blazers," said Marshall.

Swinyard recalled a game in the early 60s: "I remember quarterback J. Eldon Fortie during a particularly spectacular tackle. He was in the middle of a group of converging tacklers. They hit him from four sides and it looked like he squirted out of the top of a ketchup bottle."

World Senior Games brings athletes to Y

By KATY HART
Universe Staff Writer

A gathering of athletes, many of them elite, from across the world will be in Provo for the Huntsman World Senior Games. The program features cycling, a triathlon, soccer and 13 other events. Some BYU students are helping out, but they're too young to compete.

"It's a realization that life goes on past age 65, and that the quality of life past 65 has to do with healthy lifestyle habits," Gray said. "We're more interested now in getting a high quality of life into the years, not just more years into life."

The 1996 games include athletes from all 50 states and 16 foreign countries. The theme of the games is "Friendship, Health and Education," said Steven Heiner, director of gerontology at BYU.

"We emphasize participation over skill level," Heiner said.

Heiner also lines up guest speakers and sports celebrities each year for the event.

Each year at the games, BYU sponsors free medical testing and seminars on healthy lifestyle habits.

This year, 28 BYU students will assist in testing athletes for cancer, glaucoma and other health risks, Heiner said.

Not only does the testing provide an "international database" for gerontology research, but sometimes life-saving warnings, Gray said.

"We've identified cancer in some of the athletes before, and then they've taken corrective measures," he said.

"We know for sure we've helped save 12 lives."

Recently released information from the Office of the Surgeon General validates findings at the games that regular physical exercise reduces the risk of dying prematurely, heart disease, diabetes, the development of colon cancer, high blood pressure and feelings of depression and anxiety, Gray said.

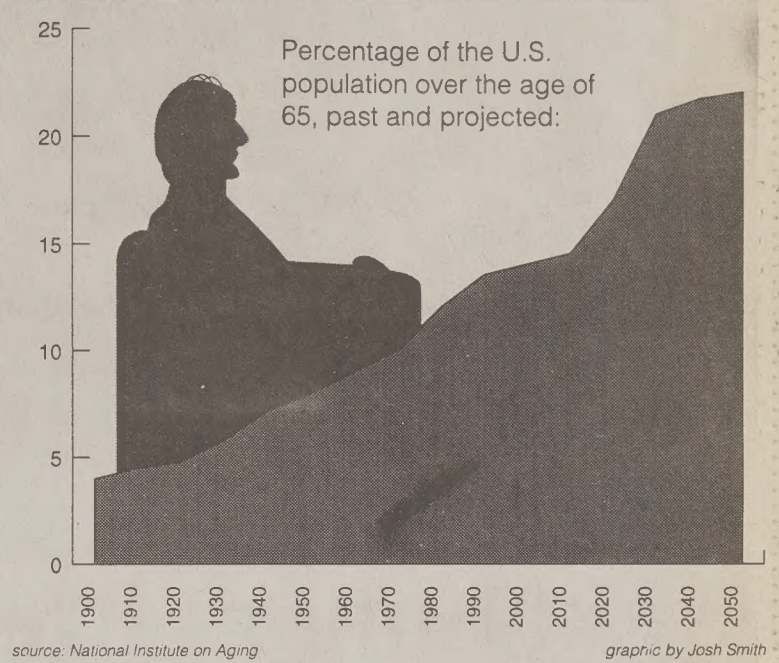

"At the World Senior Games, the senior athletes have blood pressure, cholesterol and health indexes that are the same as or better than college students," Gray said.

The senior athletes are inspiring, said Caroline Miner, a graduate student from Santa Barbara, Calif., studying health science.

"It definitely shows a sign of the times," Miner said.

"They are very much in shape, active and able to enjoy physical activity. There is a payback in the end for being physically fit."

America getting older

Gerontology minor revised, moved

By KATY HART
Universe Staff Writer

In a move designed to increase the study of aging, the gerontology minor, formerly part of the Health Science Department, will move to the College of Family, Home and Social Sciences. The change was also made in an effort to increase student awareness of that discipline.

"We want to integrate the study of quality of life for the elderly into the study of human development from infancy to old age," said Dean Clayne Pope, of the College of Family, Home and Social Science.

A university committee will meet throughout the semester to work on revisions and expansions to the program, Pope said. The final changes are expected to begin next fall.

The gerontology minor is multi-disciplinary and attracts students from a variety of majors including health science, recreational management, business, sociology, psychology, social work, family science and pre-medical, said Steven Heiner, director of the gerontology program at BYU.

Course offerings in the minor come from different departments and include such classes as health and aging, accessible recreation, geography and tourism, psychology of adulthood and leisure in contemporary society. The minor also incorporates social work, speech pathology and audiology, business and dietetics, Heiner said.

The growing senior population denotes a need for greater visibility of gerontology, Pope said.

"The demographic changes in our society would indicate that the study of aging and how to improve the quality of our lives is increasing," Pope said. "This change will help people understand that most older people live active lives and contribute a great deal."

A knowledge of gerontology also increases job opportunities as the baby boomer population increases, Heiner said.

"Seniors will be a bigger factor," Heiner said. "There will be more seniors to take care of and to provide services for."

The greater need for services comes as senior citizens' health and independence increases, said Rachel Leonard, a graduate student from Phoenix, Ariz., who minored in gerontology.

Leonard's interest in gerontology was a result of positive experiences with senior citizens.

"My own grandparents were not sickly, and so I never had the perception of older people being sickly and needing help," she said.

In filling the minor's required internship, Leonard worked at the Seville Retirement Residence in Orem, planning activities and finding out which resources are available in the community.

"We want to integrate the study of quality of life for the elderly into the study of human development from infancy to old age."

Event honors Pres. McKay

Described as
'great man,'
'missionary'

By JENNIFER DYER
Universe Staff Writer

Papa Dade was a hopeless romantic, said Alan Ashton about his grandfather, David O. McKay, 9th president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

In the Homecoming Opening Ceremony, Ashton read a love poem that President McKay wrote for his wife when he was 90 years old. This year's Homecoming theme, "Echoes of Truth," is dedicated to President McKay and his service to the church.

The echoes of truth left behind by David O. McKay are still felt by the Polynesian people, said Tamara McQuivey, hostess for the Homecoming Spectacular.

As a prophet, President McKay traveled more than two million miles, many of them in the islands of the South Pacific. "He was bright and energetic, an extraordinary teacher," said President Merrill J. Bateman.

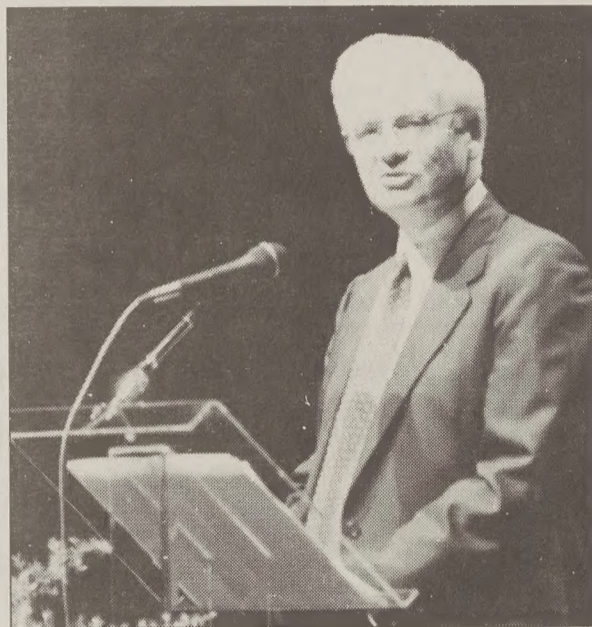

"President McKay was and still is a great man," said Tom Hart, president of the Alumni Association, which was responsible for putting together Tuesday's show.

Ashton, this year's Grand Marshall for the Homecoming Parade, shared some of his memories of his grandfather. "Some of my fondest childhood memories are being together as a family during the summer," he said.

Christmas Eve was a big event for the McKay family and each year family members participated in a talent show. "We enjoyed singing carols and we always ended by singing Papa Dade's favorite song, ~ Love at Home," Ashton said.

Papa Dade was the family nickname for President McKay. The name stuck with him when he was young and had trouble saying "Dave," pronouncing it "Dade" instead, said Lottie McKay, a daughter-in-law to President McKay.

Tuesday's festivities also included the BYU Men's Chorus singing Mack Wilberg's special arrangement of "Amazing Grace."

"Today was perfect. It caught his character, his spirit and his dignity," Lottie McKay said.

Ed McKay, a son of President McKay, agreed that the assembly was appropriate for the type of man President McKay was. "It was exceptional, everything about it was superb," he said.

Ashton challenged students to exhibit more compassion and caring and to improve their lives by emulating the Godlike qualities displayed by the prophets. He said that President McKay always opened doors for his wife, allowing her to enter the room first.

"He always thought of other's comfort before his own," Ashton said.

"He was always a missionary. He testified of the divine mission of the church. He communed with God," he said.

According to President Bateman, while President McKay was a missionary for the LDS Church, he saw an inscription on a stone doorway which he adopted as his personal motto. The inscription read, "Where e'er thou art, act well thy part."

Founder's Day focuses on Pres. McKay

By PETER FERGUSON
Universe Staff Writer

Founder's Day, currently combined with Homecoming Week, will focus on the life of President David O. McKay this year. The ninth president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, President McKay led the BYU Board of Trustees from 1951 to 1970, according to University Public Communications.

"Founder's Day was really started regarding the founders of this university," said Ida Smith, student alumni programs coordinator. "Kind of a celebration of the number of years the university had been operating."

This year, President McKay is being honored, not because he was a president of BYU, but because this is the 75th year for the College of Education, renamed the David O. McKay School of Education, Smith said.

President McKay, remembered for his love of education, once said, "Education is America's most precious asset, her greatest safeguard, her most important, most potentially profitable enterprise."

Perhaps the highlight of Founder's Day will be a banquet tonight for descendants of President McKay, university administrators and others who have been invited, according to the Alumni Association.

At 7:30 p.m. there will be an address, and the winners of the student essays will be recognized in the JSB Auditorium. This event will be open to the public.

This year, as in many previous years, Founder's Day has been combined with the Homecoming Week celebration.

"They had a Founder's Day every year, but it was not necessarily during Homecoming Week," Smith said. "At some point in time, they thought Founder's Day should be during Homecoming Week."

The activities for earlier Founder's Days, usually held on Oct. 16, included BYU-sponsored games, events, parades and a ball to celebrate the birthday of BYU, according to a 1930 edition of "The Y News".

Now the two events are combined and hard to differentiate, but Founder's Day came first.

Brigadier general to address Y ROTC

by ALECIA H. FINLINSON
Universe Staff Writer

Brigadier General ROTC has landed a first-class opportunity when the decorated Brigadier General Brian A. Arnold came to them today. Arnold is commandant, Air Force Reserve Training Corps, headquartered at Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama," said an Air Force ROTC news release. As commandant, he is responsible for recruiting and preparing more than 15,000 officers through a comprehensive college program at universities and monitors citizenship training for 4,000 Junior Air Force ROTC students at more than 100 schools throughout the United States and is coordinating the news release. Arnold is a pilot with more than 3,200 flight hours, flown FB-111, B-52D/H and T-39 aircraft. He was an officer at Officer Training School at Fort Benning, Texas, in 1971. Arnold's schooling has been extensive. Some of his accomplishments are a B.S. in education from the University of Alabama and a M.S. in administrative management from Pepperdine University. He was a member of the National War College at Fort Lesley J. McNair and a Senior Official in National Security at Harvard University.

Arnold has served in numerous assignments. Among them, he served as commander of U.S. Forces in Azores, Portugal, and commander of the 65th Air Base Wing, Lajes Field, Azores, Portugal.

Arnold's assignment in the Azores was one of the Air Force's most sensitive assignments, said Col. Maurice Stocks, professor of aerospace studies. "He went to work negotiations to place the base in care-taker status."

"He was known to be credible and to have a very positive personality — and was known to be an expert in working with people," Stocks added.

Other assignments include serving as a commander at Squadron Officer School, Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.; commander of 528th Bomb Squadron at Plattsburgh Air Force Base, N.Y.; and B-2 program element monitor, Office of Low Observances, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Acquisition, the Pentagon, Washington D.C.

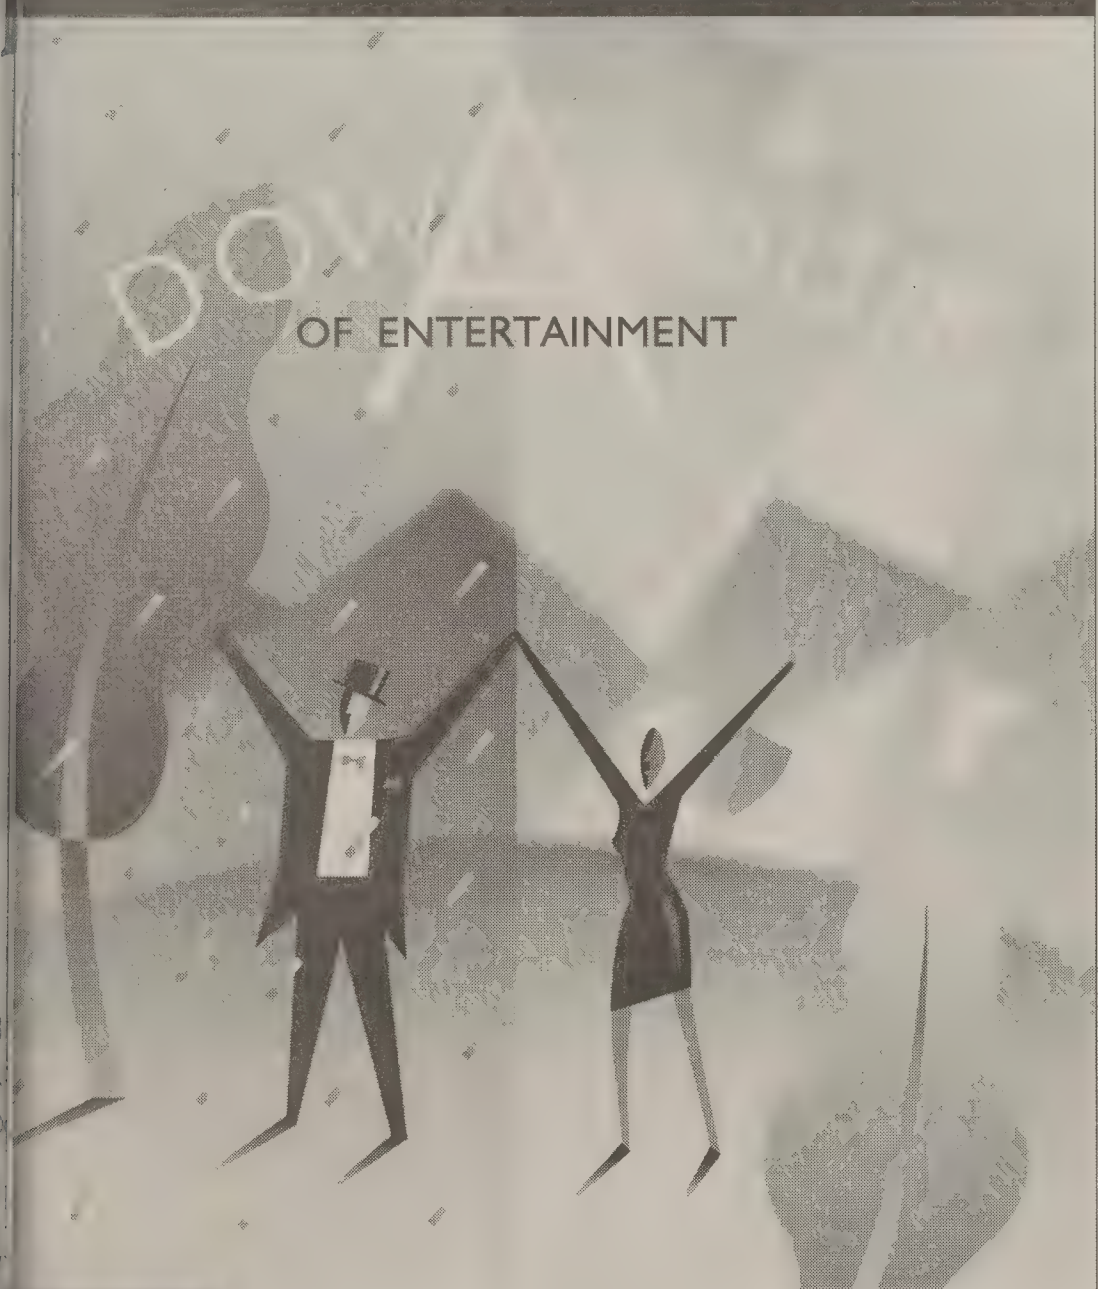

Arnold has a reputation for "an eye on the mission, but he is very sensitive to people," Stocks said.

The Air Force has decorated Arnold with several medals. Some include Defense Superior Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with four oak leaf clusters, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Air Force Commendation Medal and Air Force Achievement Medal.

Arnold will speak to BYU's ROTC in 151 TNRB at 2 p.m.

Career Day will help students hone job skills

By THOMAS J. ABBOTT
Universe Staff Writer

Students trying to decide "what they will be when they grow up" will find help Thursday during Career Day, sponsored by the Management Society of the Marriott School of Management.

"Career Day is an opportunity to meet business professionals and ask them questions," said Michael Bingham, Career Day chairman.

Students will be able to meet company executives and BYU alumni from companies in many fields of study. Bingham named First Security Bank, EDS and Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance as participating companies.

Each participant will have a booth in the atrium of the Tanner Building from 10 a.m. to noon. During this time, students can ask career-related questions.

Mock job interviews aimed at helping students hone interview skills will be from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. in various rooms throughout the Tanner Building. Many of the interviews will be performed by BYU alumni, Bingham said. Interested persons can sign up for a time slot in 490 TNRB. Recruiting will not take place from these interviews, but they will provide contacts for the future.

"People should be on time and bring a resume if they want the resume to be reviewed," Bingham said. "The biggest problem that we had last year was that so many people were late for their interviews."

SUPER HERO: SAC Man, whose student alias is Geoff Howard, stands ready to serve students and respond to their concerns.

SAC Man new Y hero

By AMY ANDERSON
Universe Staff Writer

Students have a powerful new voice in student government: SAC Man.

The Student Advisory Council unveiled its new student body liaison during its general meeting on Oct. 3. SAC Man will help serve as a communication line between the Council and the BYU student body.

SAC Man is designed to heighten student awareness of the council, its purpose and current SAC issues. He also listens to student concerns and takes them before the Council during regular meetings.

"He's faster than a speeding bike, he's stronger than Cosmo and he can leap ... in a single bound," announced SAC vice-president Peter Miller, one of the influences behind the new character's creation.

SAC Man can be seen sporting his bulging muscles, blue tights and knee-length shorts at games and while conducting student surveys on campus. He will debut in the Homecoming Parade and football game, Sat. Oct. 12.

Concern was expressed by Council members over the method of introducing SAC Man to the public. "He's a vehicle between the students and the council to let them know who we are," said Program Director Nicole Stout. But first the student body must know who SAC Man is.

Along with the introduction of SAC Man, the balance of the agenda was made up of non-LDS student concerns.

The creation of a special Book of Mormon section for non-LDS students was also introduced to the council by Arturo Ochoa, the SAC representative for students of other faiths.

Ochoa expressed the difficulty students of other religions face in Religion 121/122 classes geared towards LDS students. They lack Book of Mormon exposure from church and seminary experience and can feel lost when lectures delve deep into church doctrine.

A new section of Book of Mormon for students of other faiths could "eliminate the learning disadvantage, make students feel more comfortable and help professors change their teaching approach," said Ochoa.

SAC members expressed interest in the idea and moved to send it to committee for further consideration.

The ups and downs of the stock market are anyone's guess, and the Marriott School of Management is offering students the chance to try their luck.

Nathan Jensen, a senior from Provo majoring in finance, is chairman of the Investment Challenge, a program put on by the Marriott School of Management.

Jensen said the program is a contest that helps students learn about the stock market and have a lot of fun at the same time.

The program is being sponsored this year by American Express Financial Advisors and will run from Oct. 15 to Nov. 15.

"Each participant will be allowed to invest $100,000," Jensen said. "The four trades will be allowed to the winner. Other prizes include software from Corel (including Corel Suite 7.0), Draw 6.0. Participants will be allowed to keep track of their gains over the 30-day Investment Challenge with an honor system," Jensen said. "Winners' quotes will be lost verified."

Registration for the Investment Challenge begins Oct. 15. TNRB.

Freshman presidency begins making plans for school year

By ALECIA H. FINLINSON
Universe Staff Writer

The dynamic duo, Adam Barlow and Chris Gee, are settling into their new positions after their first week as freshman president and vice president.

"Chris is off the wall and Adam is down to earth," said Bryan Farris, executive director of SAC.

"They both want to work very hard to make this the best experience," Farris said.

"They are going to need a lot of people to help facilitate the changes they want to make and to implement the programs they want to begin."

"Chris and I got together and made an outline of some broad goals we had set and some specific goals that fell into those categories," Barlow said.

"We really have a lot of the same ideals and ideas for our class this year," Gee said.

Some of the ideas and issues they have to confront include a freshman newsletter, meal hours, study halls, dances and freshman awareness. They are also looking to future

They have appointed two assistants and are assembling a council that should be complete by Barlow and Gee are the freshman voice in the Student Advisory Council, where they hope to discuss some of their issues.

Foreign leaders discuss religion

By BRENT HALL
Universe Staff Writer

Leaders from around the world gathered on campus Monday to discuss religious freedom in a symposium sponsored by the J. Reuben Clark Law School.

"It is our desire that the ideas shared at this conference will build love and trust among the represented countries," said W. Cole Durham, professor of law at BYU and developer of the symposium. "Every country here, including the United States, can learn from other countries."

Government officials and dignitaries at the conference represented Mexico, Russia, Ukraine and other Eastern European nations. Their lectures centered around the conference theme, "Emerging Trends in Church-State Relations," and will be published in scholarly journals such as the BYU Law Review, which is due out later this year.

Durham spends several months each year living in the Eastern Bloc and meeting with officials of their governments. His assignments include helping new independent states from the former Soviet Union develop a constitution. He hopes that through his work these countries will be better able to develop constitutions that allow basic religious freedoms.

BYU is just one stop on a lengthy tour of the United States for speakers at the conference. They met at Columbia University on Oct. 2 before traveling to Washington D.C. to meet with U.S. government officials. They will also meet at Baylor University in Texas before returning to their homelands.

Delegates for the symposium spent Tuesday meeting with Elders Jeffrey R. Holland, Neal A. Maxwell and Russell M. Nelson of the Quorum of the Twelve and other members of the Quorum of the Seventy at a reception in the Lion House. They were also given a tour of Welfare Square.

Delegates of the conference will be able to take the information gained from the symposium and their associations with church officials back to their countries. Organizers of the conference hope the exposure of the delegates to the United States and the LDS Church will expand opportunities for all involved.

"The topics discussed at this conference are important," said Emily Lauritzen, assistant conference planner and a second-year law student. "but the associations with church dignitaries as well as government officials in this country are also an important side benefit."

Salient issues gain spot in debates

AP Photo

COUNTRY: Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole addressed the American Legion in Salt Lake City on Sept. 8, saying he wants to have a voice in the presidential debates. Dole and President Clinton can do so by sending their comments to rocthevote@aol.com.

By SYRENE KOONS
Universe Staff Writer

Rock the Vote, an organization that encourages young people to become involved in politics, is helping students to rock the debates by collecting opinions and responses concerning the presidential debates and forwarding them to the candidates and the moderator.

Rock the Vote was created in 1990 by members of the recording industry who wanted to use music to encourage young people to participate in the political process. Its founders are dedicated to educating young people about political issues.

"As a young person, I know that conversations usually take place with peers about why the candidates never address any issues that I am concerned with," said Andrea Foggy, deputy field director for Rock the Vote.

"I thought that a nationwide effort to mobilize youth to respond to the debate and ask the questions that they would like answered would add pressure to the candidates to get down to the nitty-gritty and talk about the issues," she said.

"Each candidate wants to appeal to college students," Foggy said, citing the over two million young voters.

An e-mail address has been established by Rock the Vote to give young people a chance to voice their opinions. The responses will then be sorted and organized according to the most common, pointed, and salient issues. The top 10 questions will be compiled and released to the press.

The comments will then be delivered by mail to President Clinton, Bob Dole, and Jim Lehrer, moderator for the debates.

Individuals need to send reactions, comments and questions about issues for the debate before the Oct. 11 deadline. The e-mail address for those who want to send comments is rocthevote@aol.com.

USU gets patent for bacteria-resistant gene

Associated Press

LOGAN — Utah State University researchers and the school's Center for Developmental and Molecular Biology have received a patent for constructing a unique gene.

Professors William Reed and Kenneth White hope the gene will eventually help prevent a disease that threatens cows.

The researchers have used the gene in mice and have found that when injected into the rodent embryos, the animals and their offspring are more resistant to bacteria.

In mice, the gene makes "white blood cells nastier," said White, head researcher for the gene enhancement project.

"Instead of carrying around a .22, they are carrying around a .44 Magnum," he said.

USU researchers also have infected mice with the bacterium, Brucella abortus, that causes brucellosis, or Bang's disease.

Mice that expressed traits of the "new gene" showed a significant reduction — approximately 50 percent — in the Brucella abortus bacterium, compared with the control group, according to the researchers.

Vic Saunders, vice president of communications at the Utah Farm Bureau, said the findings would be great news to the cattle industry if researchers could make livestock express and pass on the gene to their offspring.

Because there are stringent inspections on cattle coming into the state, Utah is considered "brucellosis free," Saunders said.

Alternative to peace Arafat, Pres. Weizman

Associated Press

HA, Israel — With negotiators back at the walking off in anger, Arafat made his first public appearance Tuesday and pledged to stop firing again.

Arafat took the garden chairs on the terrace at the Erez border crossing, where he and Weizman traded blows, shook hands for the first time since they agreed there was no more to peace.

The cozy meeting came less than a week after deadly gun battles between Israeli and Palestinian security forces in the West Bank and Gaza.

At the luncheon and Arafat's first public appearance since the incident to the south, at the Erez border crossing, Arafat said he was not discouraged by setbacks.

"The most important thing is that we began the meetings," Arafat said in this Mediterranean town, where he was flown by an Israeli air force helicopter from his Gaza City headquarters.

"As long as there are meetings, no doubt something that is good for the two peoples will come out of them," Arafat said. "We must live as neighbors and watch out for each other's interests."

Weizman, whose role is largely ceremonial, said he has held Arafat in esteem for years, "with ups and downs," and referred to him as a "colleague."

Arafat addressed the Israeli as "ra'is," the Arabic word for chairman or president that many dovish Israeli politicians have begun using for Arafat.

The atmosphere was homey, with Weizman's wife, Reuma, coming out onto the terrace a few times — at one point to set a jug of water on the table, decorated with olive branches and laden with Arabic sweets, fruits and orange juice.

Arafat wants to retain control over the area that links the Jewish enclaves with the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a site in the center of town that is holy to both Muslims and Jews.

Even considering the Israeli demands would be tantamount to renegotiating the terms of peace agreements signed with Israel's previous government, said Ibrahim Kreishe, a senior Palestinian negotiator.

Still, talks resumed at the Erez border crossing, with Hebron remaining the key item on the agenda.

Yeltsin reasserts control with high-level firings

Associated Press

MOSCOW — It's a lesson his rivals never seem to heed: Don't write off Boris Yeltsin too quickly.

Roused by a new political threat from Security Chief Alexander Lebed and charges he wasn't really in control, the ailing president has made a flurry of top-level firings, promotions and maneuverings to show he still wields power.

His actions appear to have quieted his critics, for the moment. But it was only an early test for a delicate balancing act that Yeltsin will have to maintain for months to come.

Whispered speculation about Yeltsin's decline grew louder during his recent three-week hospital stay before heart surgery, set for later this fall. In an attempt to allay concerns, Yeltsin made a series of taped television appearances, in which his voice was rarely heard.

He was barely functioning, the talk went. He was only rubber-stamping his aides' decisions. He had suffered a stroke. Rumors aside, even his aides acknowledged he sometimes worked as little as 30 minutes a day.

Lebed, who has waged a power struggle with other Kremlin insiders, complained it wasn't clear "whether we have a president or not" and called on Yeltsin to temporarily step down.

A haggard but clearly alert Yeltsin, irritated by what the Kremlin described as alarmist reports, moved 30, or three hours, but he is still in control," Dmitry Pinsker, a political columnist for Itogi magazine, said. "That's the way he is made — he won't ever let power slip away."

This is, after all, the president often characterized as being intoxicated

"Boris Yeltsin is a fighter, and he will go to the end to ensure that he stays in power. Whether his body and the Russian medical profession will allow him to do that is another question."

—Ariel Cohen,
senior policy analyst for the Heritage Foundation to reassert his authority. In radio and TV broadcasts, he assured Russians he remains on top of things and warned them not to rush to take down his portrait in the Kremlin.

He complained of "petty intrigues" while he was hospitalized and publicly rebuked Lebed for arguing with everybody.

"He may work 15 minutes a day, or with power. His recent orders have served as evidence that he's still the boss.

In the last month, Yeltsin has -Deliberately bypassed Lebed to give aide Yuri Baturin control of military promotions as head of the new Defense Council. Lebed subsequently threatened to resign.

- Promoted new Defense Minister

Igor Rodionov to full general, ensuring he won't have to retire when he turns 60 in December. Rodionov's rise also cuts into Lebed's potential power — a classic Yeltsin political tactic of playing underlings against each other.

- Fired generals who had opposed military reductions.

- Scolded parliament for not accomplishing more and urged them to better cooperate with his administration.

- Fired Sports Minister Shamil Tarpishev, who was tainted by a scandal surrounding a secretive fundraising group.

Even if the maneuvering is being led by his iron-willed chief of staff, Anatoly Chubais, the president clearly is moving to "de-fang and declaw" the ambitious Lebed, as phrased by Ariel Cohen, senior policy analyst for the Heritage Foundation, a Washington-based think tank.

"Boris Yeltsin is a fighter, and he will go to the end to ensure that he stays in power," Cohen said.

"Whether his body and the Russian medical profession will allow him to do that is another question. It is very much a race now between Boris Yeltsin's will and Boris Yeltsin's flesh."

David Letterman, eat your heart out! With hunting season just around the corner the Utah State Parks and Recreation Off-Highway Vehicle (OHV) Department has their own top ten list.

Scott Behumin, coordinator of OHV, says that by abiding by the "Top Ten OHV Laws and Rules" they would be more likely to ride safely this season.

Making the OHV's "top ten" were the following:

9. Off-roads must be alcohol and drug free while operating OHVs.
8. Husbandry vehicles must be dual registered for off-roading.
7. Off-roads must use proper safety equipment.
6. OHV operators must not harass wildlife or vandalize property.
5. OHV operators must not trespass on private property or on public land not marked for their use.
4. All injury and property damage must be reported to the Parks and Recreation.

American economist shares Nobel with British professor

Associated Press

NEW YORK — An American economist with unorthodox ideas — among them that "it's insane to try to balance the budget" — Tuesday shared the Nobel economics prize with a British professor.

William Vickrey, professor emeritus at Columbia University, and James Mirrlees of Cambridge University in England were cited for explaining how governments as well as consumers use incomplete data to make decisions.

Vickrey and Mirrlees will split the $1.12 million prize for innovative studies on "asymmetric information."

The theory, used to explain human behavior, refers to the way in which everyone — from governments and giant corporations to small businesses and consumers — makes decisions based on varying kinds and amounts of data.

Traditional economic theory held that all sides had the same information but different preferences, which influenced decision-making. "Asymmetric information" means one side knows something another side does not.

A person seeking medical coverage may have health problems, but the insurer won't know it.

A buyer won't know as much about a used car as the seller. And government doesn't know the earnings abilities of taxpayers.

Although Vickrey and Mirrlees conducted separate studies decades apart, the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences in Stockholm, Sweden, said their work led to a better understanding of economic activity, including tax programs, auctions, insurance and credit markets.

"It's very gratifying, ... very warming," said Vickrey, 82, a naturalized American citizen and native of Vancouver, British Columbia.

"I was amazed," said Mirrlees, 60, a native of Scotland. He told reporters at Cambridge he was skeptical when he got the call from the academy. "I wanted to make sure I wasn't being teased," he said.

The annual prize is the third of the six Nobels to be awarded this year. The Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science is awarded by the Swedish Central Bank in honor of inventor Alfred Nobel.

Vickrey told reporters he intends to use the windfall to "make the most of the opportunity to keep spreading some of my heretical ideas."

He has gone against popular wisdom by advocating the government take on more, not less, debt. "The insane pursuit of the holy grail of a balanced budget in the end is going to drive the economy into a depression," he said.

"The great increase in longevity has produced a surge in the desire to accumulate assets for retirement," he said. "It has outpaced the ability of the private sector to produce assets, so we need a larger government debt. ... It's insane to try to balance the budget."

For four decades, he has tried in vain to persuade New York transit officials to charge subway users based on the time of day and distance of their trips, to minimize congestion and set more equitable fares.

A quarter of a century later, Mirrlees revived interest in the model when he studied how high to set income taxes without discouraging workers and investors or fostering tax evasion.

Museum brings classroom, science to kids

Associated Press

State educators are bringing bits of the Utah Museum of Natural History to students who can't travel to Utah's capital city to see it in person.

Through the Museum on the Move Program, fourth-graders across the state are learning a variety facts about animals, plants, insects and ecosystems in Utah.

For instance, did you know a handful of salt from the Great Salt Lake will dissolve in vinegar? Or that eggs from brine shrimp in the same lake are shipped to Asia to be hatched for lobster food?

"It's better than the normal classroom experience," said program coordinator Chuck Wayland. "They (the students) get hands-on as well as group experience and they practice reading and leadership skills."

The 2-year-old program, funded by the Utah State Office of Education, was brought last year to more than 40 schools from St. George to northern Logan. The goal is to reach fourth-graders in all 40 school districts over the next three years.

The program targets fourth-grade students because the state's science curriculum for that level focuses on Utah's natural history. Teachers choose from 10 different teaching kits, which Wayland brings to the schools along with a short introductory discussion.

At Provost Elementary School in Provo, teacher Layne Reinwand's class rotated through five stations. Students could match pictures of plants and animals to the proper habitat around the Great Salt Lake, or learn that a golf ball will sink in fresh water but floats in water from lake.

"Kids always like something that's active and involved. The more visual it is, the more learning goes on," said Reinwand.

At the end of each workshop, Wayland leaves the students with a bookmark and free pass to visit the Utah Museum of Natural History at the University of Utah.

"The feedback on the program has been extremely positive," he said. "The teachers love it and the kids are having a good time learning. I can't think of a better combination."

PRO IS IN: Ronald Staheli, director of the University Singers, conducts a recent performance. Staheli is known to incorporate gospel teachings into his classes and music. The Choral Society last week highlighted the different vocal performance groups on campus. Students agree that Staheli helps make the choir.

Choirs require talent, dedication

World of Dance was a little different this week. The last week's Choral Society was a fresh mix of much to offer in the way of dance groups. The choirs beautifully displayed changes from low to high from classical to folk. The members of the choirs do not come without work and commitment. Staheli, director of both the Men's Chorus and the Women's Chorus, said that singing at BYU is a demanding performance.

mance schedule and is only academically worth one credit hour. Wilberg says that he himself is demanding on his students also. But students involved in the choir say that the benefits of singing outweigh the rigorous requirements of the class. "Life without choir is like food without salt and pepper," said Mitchell Heath, a member of Concert Choir. Heath, who is a manufacturing engineering technology major, said that singing with the choir is a "release from the everyday, it's just great to make music." Nathan McKellar, another member of Concert Choir, agrees. He said the reward of singing is not with the academic credit, but it is in the "personal satisfaction of taking part in such a wonderful thing." Heath feels that music helps one to become a better person and unlock one's mind to allow them to be more creative. He said it relaxes him and lets him think about and organize the things that are important in his life. Adam Tate, a senior in music education from Phelan, Calif., auditioned for University Singers because he wanted a chance to learn from its conductor, Ronald Staheli. Tate said that since being in the Singers he has learned much more than how to direct a vocal group. He said Staheli incorporates Gospel teachings into the class and the music. Tate describes Staheli as "strong and intense" about music, but warm with his students.

An internship in India provides life in a mud hut, independence

By TAMARA NATASHA SPENCE
Universe Staff Writer

Breaking away from the traditional European-based study abroad programs, BYU's International Internship Department now offers semester internships in India. Dave Shuler, coordinator for international field studies and internships, first became acquainted with India in 1987. "I did some graduate work in India four years ago. I worked on an ethnography of a fishing village. Ever since then students have been asking if it was possible to do something like I did over there. I then started thinking about creating a similar program at BYU," Shuler said. India houses the second largest population in the world, with an estimated 930 million people in 1995. According to Hugh Finlay, author of "India," 75 percent of India's women receive little education, few rights and work in strenuous and poor-paying jobs. Nicole Caldwell, 23, an anthropology major with an emphasis in international development from Midway, was particularly interested in the plight of women in India. Caldwell went to India as part of an international internship program that taught English in local schools and set up orphanages. "While in India I did an ethnography on how Indians worked. I found out that men go to work and play after, and the women mix work and play all day long. To women nothing they do is very exciting, so they mix their recreation and work together. This program was an incredible opportunity to do research," Caldwell said. While India affords many students the opportunity to do various ethnographic research projects, the harsh lifestyle may not be suitable for everyone noted Shuler. "The biggest problem for the program is the complexity of the Indian society, language and the physical as well as emotional difficulty of the experience. It is crowded; some students end up washing their clothes on rocks; there are no bathrooms in the villages and the food is often too hot to eat," Shuler said. Caldwell attested to the inherent difficulties involved in working in India but believed the program was an excellent opportunity for students who didn't mind getting their hands dirty. "I lived in a mud hut with my project partner Arianne Davis. The experience showed me what it was really like to be an anthropologist," Caldwell said. Rather than the traditional supervised internships, it is the India program's emphasis on being self-motivated and independent that attracts many students like Caldwell. "It wasn't like the London program where you go to the theater or a museum and then on some planned trip. You had to be self-motivated and do a lot of things on your own. I came away learning things I would never have learned if I had gone on some highly-chaperoned program," Caldwell said. "I really gained a respect for the program because they treated us like true adults; we got to choose what we were going to study and had the responsibility to support the university," she said. Kevin Pestinger, an intern facilitator for the study abroad office, stated that while the majority of the students who go on the program are anthropology majors, the program is open to everyone. Students can also arrange to receive credit in their field. "Students first have to take a prep class called the anthropology of India. They are given an assignment before they go by a professor in their field. Anthropology students will usually have to keep a field journal, read about 1000 pages and write a 10-15 page paper on the topic they research. However, different departments can give students credit for working on projects in their respective fields," Pestinger said. Shuler believes the India program has a lot to offer BYU students and would eventually like to expand the program from a one-semester experience into a two-semester program. "As our office grows we will go to a Fall and Winter semester program. Spring and summer are too hot — temperatures can reach 120 degrees and the humidity is unbearable," Shuler said. Students interested in doing an internship in India should contact Dave Shuler or Kevin Pestinger at 378-3308.

SPARE TIME: BYU student Clint McKinlay, majoring in advertising, tries to pick up two at Regal Lanes' new cosmic bowling. "Cosmic" bowling at Regal Lanes features glow in the dark pins, balls and lanes, laser light shows, and loud music.

Bowling turns 'cosmic' at Regal Lanes

By JAMES M. SPEAR
Universe Staff Writer

Looking for something different to do this weekend? Regal Lanes, at 1200 North University Ave., has put a new twist on bowling.

They call it "Cosmic Bowling." Every Friday and Saturday night and every Monday afternoon, the lights are turned down and the music is turned up. An ordinary hour of bowling becomes something a bit more unusual with laser light shows, fog machines, glow in the dark pins, balls and lanes.

Karen Stegmeier, program director at Regal Lanes, said in a recent press release that, "Cosmic Bowling offers something exciting for everyone. ... It's a game, a concert, an arcade, a light show, a dance party and regular bowling all rolled into one event."

The concept is not new. According to Berda Wright, bookkeeper at Regal Lanes, Cosmic Bowling has been popular in other states for years.

Regal Lanes invested $150,000 to bring Cosmic Bowling to Utah County. Wright is confident though, that the investment will pay itself off.

"It's been going on in the east for quite awhile and its remained very popular," Wright said.

Mothers, Kim Dahl and Stacey Tucker, like to take their children bowling, and they feel that Cosmic Bowling is especially fun for the kids.

"We just had two birthday parties here," Dahl said. "They just have so much fun. It is a good time, and unlike going to the movies and just sitting there quietly, the kids get to interact with each other."

While Cosmic Bowling is beginning to pick up momentum it is not the main draw at Regal Lanes.

According to Wright the real constant through the years has been the various organized leagues that meet during the week. Seniors, mixed-doubles, men, women, and youth leagues are the vitality.

From the looks of things Regal Lanes is doing well. The interior was redone a few years ago, according to Wright. It has a clean historical feel to it. A quick look around reveals things from every decade. Yet, the thing that caught my eye, or I should say my nose, was something that wasn't there ... the smell of cigarette smoke. A smokeless bowling establishment is unheard of in most states. But for a nonsmoker it is a refreshing change.

There is a room provided for people that would like to smoke. Regal Lanes has seen some real changes during the past 40 years — from glow-in-the-dark bowling, to computerized score keeping. There is even a machine that tracks the speed of your bowling ball as it rolls down the lane.

Wright remembers when the east side of the building was a pasture for horses and animals. Now Regal Lanes is surrounded by fast-food restaurants and a carwash. Times sure do change.

Janeane Garofalo in music video

Universe Services

That's Janeane Garofalo, star of the critically acclaimed film "The Truth About Cats and Dogs," in Cowboy Junkies' video for "Angel Mine," the second track from their album "Lay It Down."

According to Nigel Dick, who directed the video, it was mutual admiration that made Garofalo's appearance in the video possible: "She really wanted to do it because she loves Cowboy Junkies so much."

Dick said of Garofalo, "She's a sweetheart — probably the most unpretentious movie star I've ever worked with."

For Dick, a music video pioneer whose first project was producing a clip for the English ska band Madness in 1980, that's quite a statement.

So, too, is his ranking of Cowboy Junkies as "the lowest-key band I've ever worked with, remarkably so. They're not about wailing guitars and waving their heads about and screaming. And they don't like to 'act' in their videos. They're loathe to do anything that is 'acting.'"

So while the band played in the entryway of Los Angeles' El Rey Theater, Garofalo portrayed the cashier in the ticket booth.

"It's an allusion to 'Cats and Dogs' but without the gag of using footage in the video," explains Dick, who adds with a laugh that during the one-day shoot "there were no drive-by shootings, no serial autograph-hunting fans; it was a remarkably ordinary day."

As the clip unfolds, Garofalo's character performs small but touching acts of random kindness — giving money to a bag lady (after sharing a moment of mutual lipstick application), taking the hand of a lost child.

"Most artists prefer directors to color their songs with their own pictures rather than literally translate the lyrics," Dick said. "I tried to take a general view of 'Angel Mine' but also not attempt too much subtlety."

Toward the conclusion of the video, a teen-ager approaches the ticket booth with a $50 bill. Unable to make the requisite change, the cashier offers him free admission.

"The irony is that the theater hasn't made enough money to have change for a fifty," Dick points out. "All day the woman selling tickets has done favors for people, and she hasn't made a buck. That's the way a day can go in life."

The milk hype: what does it all mean?

By JAMES M. SPEAR
Universe Staff Writer

You've seen the "Milk Mustache" ads in your favorite magazines. Always an attractive actor somehow looking completely normal and cool despite a milk mustache on their upper lip. Whenever I see these ads, several questions come to my mind. What does the milk mean and why don't I look that good when I have milk on my face?

Looking into the matter I discovered that an organization, the Milk Processor Education Program, has actually been formed by U.S. milk processors. Their objective is to change attitudes and to correct the misconceptions about milk.

ask. What's wrong with milk? Are you like me, a great advocate of the milk movement, or do you have misconceptions of moo juice.

Kurt Graetzer, the executive director for the Milk Processor Education Program, said in a recent press release that nine out of 10 women and six out of 10 men are not meeting their daily calcium requirements.

He adds, "It's easy to see why calcium is the single nutrient most likely to be missing in the American diet."

I've never had to worry about getting enough milk. I love the stuff. I only have one memory of a less than desirable experience with milk. I was seven or eight; too short to reach the milk on the top shelf in the refrigerator. But exercising my independence, even at that age, I managed to reach the handle of the jug by standing on the first shelf and literally climbing up the refrigerator. I managed to reach the handle but slipped in the process, pulling the jug of cold milk on top of my head. I'm glad I gave milk another chance. Hot cookies out of the oven just wouldn't be the same without it.

In their efforts to educate the masses, the Milk Processor Education Program, the same people who brought you the milk mustache ads, are having a contest. They want to end the famous "white lie" that all milk is fattening.

Through October 15, the Web site (<http://whymilk.com>) and the hotline (1-800-WHY-MILK) will accept calls from anyone who hasn't let the truth get in the way of a good story. Or perhaps you have strayed from the truth in the past but are ready to make things right. All of the entries will be judged on originality and creativity (100 words or less). The winner will be announced on election day. Yep, you guessed it! In honor of George Washington, "honest" Abe Lincoln and the others who have lived in the "White" House.

MAKE THE CONNECTION

STEPS TO A BETTER BODY—AND A BETTER LIFE

Courtesy BYU Bookstore

GREEN: Oprah Winfrey in her book with Bob Greene discusses facing overweight people and the strategies to overcoming. Greene, who is an exercise physiologist and promotes a healthy 10-step program.

'The Connection' gives Winfrey's dieting secrets

BY NATAASHA SPENCE
Universe Staff Writer

By Sears' book "Enter the Connection," the best selling book by Bob Greene and Oprah Winfrey will surely usurp the upcoming months. The book is filled with sidebar information on Winfrey's battle with obesity. "The Connection" is the most comprehensive book on the subject of weight loss. Her account of her own struggles, embarrassment, and the help of Phil Donahue would not have to go on to read an inside peek into the emotional depression of weight-loss saga.

"The Connection" doesn't read like a complex book or scare them off with unrealistic diets. Green, an exercise physiologist and personal trainer, provides an easy ten-step program to follow and a diet plan to help the reader's life into a complete entry.

Green at the heaviest of her life, when she was 170 pounds. Raised on a diet of food and family, she kept her refrigerator during the night, Winfrey faced many of the problems the average overweight person deals with: lack of self control, bad eating habits or absence of intense exercise in their daily routine.

According to Green, people overeat for a variety of reasons that are not necessarily connected with hunger. An unhappy childhood, bad marriage, death of a loved one or an unfulfilling career may cause a person to seek solace in food, noted Green.

To begin the battle of the bulge Green advocated that a person first get to know themselves on an intimate level. A dieter should be aware of their likes, dislikes, motivations and mental attitude towards eating, dieting and what makes them happy. While this may appear to be another health guru's attempt at making his reader jump through unnecessary and worthless hoops, Green believes that in order to make physical changes in one's body a person must understand why they behave the way they do.

A photo essay of Winfrey's cycle of weight gain and loss coupled with excerpts from her personal journals allow the reader to make a personal connection with Winfrey. Winfrey's plight becomes real and one is able to draw strength from her struggle and eventual triumph over obesity.

A wonderfully revealing and informative book, "Make The Connection" can help reconnect the perpetual dieter with the body they had before or the body they've always wanted.

The food place no one knows about on campus

By MARY L. OTIS
Universe Staff Writer

Ever been to the Elizabeth Dining Room? Before Monday, I had never had the pleasure. Found in 1111 SFLC, the delicious, cafeteria-style restaurant is actually a class for students majoring in dietetics.

The class gives students the opportunity to play a part in each of the food service roles from server to manager.

Anna Mitchell, BYU faculty member and instructor of the class, said the class is great for students who wish to go on in the food service profession. She said even though students with an education probably won't be doing the same jobs they do in the lab again, it will help them to better relate to those employees in the future.

Victoria Walker, a junior from Overland Park, Kan., said the lab is a great educational experience for the students involved.

Betsy Pate, a junior from Provo, decided she wanted learn more about dietetics when she was a sophomore in high school. She said the restaurant is great for the public and the students because of the food and prices.

Prices fit well into the pocketbook of any BYU student. For a well-rounded "Feature Attraction," customers pay only $3, and that's the most expensive item on the menu.

Also, the food isn't exactly like the Cougar eat. Customers can find a good-quality, hot meal as opposed to fast food. Dishes like Chicken Enchiladas and Quiche Lorraine are found in the Elizabeth every day.

Mitchell said the reason they can keep the prices so low and the food quality so high, is because they don't worry about making a profit. None of the students are paid for their work, so the money made goes right back into the class.

The lab is almost completely self-sufficient, outside of some help it receives from the Dietetic Department for major purchases like new refrigerators.

Pate said the reason customers like the Elizabeth is because it's smaller and there is more of an ambience. And even though it's a little "off the beaten track," Pate said customers appreciate the good food and the price.

The Elizabeth Dining Room has been in operation for 30 years, on and off, Mitchell said.

HUD announces $716 million face lift for public housing

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is awarding $716 million in 74 cities to demolish some of the nation's worst public housing. The funds will also help to build new homes designed to keep neighborhoods drug free.

"It is a national tragedy that any child — any family — needs to live in the conditions that I have seen in Detroit and Philadelphia and Newark and the south side of Chicago," Henry G. Cisneros, secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, said today in announcing the grants.

"It is wrong for taxpayer dollars to go into buildings that serve frequently as little more than operating bases for open-air drug markets," he said.

Nearly 17,000 units will be demolished and 4,000 new public housing units will be built in an attempt to create residential communities — smaller units with better security — to help revitalize surrounding neighborhoods, HUD officials said.

Since 1993, HUD has demolished 23,000 housing units and plans to demolish 100,000 by the year 2000.

About $477 million of the grants will pay for demolishing housing, refurbishing units, building new public housing or job training for residents.

Another $239 million will help more than 15,000 families displaced during housing demolitions rent private apartments.

The cities getting the largest grants are Chicago, $122 million; Atlanta, $45.8 million; Pittsburgh, $45.1 million; Detroit, $34.2 million; New Orleans, $32.2 million; Cleveland, $29.7 million; District of Columbia, $25 million; Baltimore, $25.8 million; Charlotte, N.C., $24.5 million; Louisville, Ky., $23 million; and New York, $21.9 million.

Cisneros said the goal of the program will be to "fundamentally remake the stock of public housing. It's going to make a big difference on the skylines of our cities."

Babbitt vows to get public input on policy

By WHITNEY A. SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

On the heels of President Clinton's announcement to create the new 1.7 million-acre Escalante National Monument, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt has promised to insure public input for the on-going wilderness review and re-inventory process in Utah.

According to a press release, Rep. Bill Orton, D-Utah, announced that Babbitt has committed to a public comment period for the wilderness re-inventory process in Utah.

Although Babbitt and Orton have categorically disagreed on many public land policy decisions, Babbitt said in a recent letter to Orton that the public's opinion should be at the forefront of the issue.

Babbitt recently insisted on an on-going review of the Bureau of Land Management, managing public lands outside existing Wilderness Study Areas in Utah. The review is scheduled to be completed in January.

The review was initiated to determine whether or not any of Utah's BLM lands have enough wilderness characteristics to become park or recreation lands.

According to Carol Sisco, a spokeswoman for the Utah Department of Environment Quality, a wilderness characteristic includes any lands over 5,000 acres which are roadless, undisturbed and relatively free of permanent fixtures such as power lines or energy sources.

The BLM currently has an estimated 3.2 million acres of land in existing Wilderness Study Areas in Utah. In addition to this acreage, the citizens of Utah have proposed an additional 2.5 million acres to be considered for Wilderness Study Area status.

Don Banks, Chief of External Affairs for the BLM in Utah, said that the current review of BLM lands will include the citizen-proposed acreage.

"Utahns want the viable land to be used for recreation and solitude," Banks said.

Banks also noted that the BLM retains approximately 22 million acres of land in Utah, the majority of which is located in the south central part of the state.

For residents of Utah County, the nearest BLM lands considered in the review are in the west desert area, west of Utah Lake.

Babbitt has assured Governor Leavitt and Orton, in an letter dated Oct. 1, that before any decisions are made about the BLM lands which are being reviewed, the public's consideration will come first.

"I intend to take no action changing the current management regime for these lands without full consultation and public input ahead of time," Babbitt said in the letter.

In addition to the BLM lands review, Orton was recently successful in encouraging the Clinton administration to include Utahns in the process of creating the Escalante National Monument.

Dave Lemmon, press secretary to Orton said that President Clinton has agreed to a three-year public process which will allow Utahns to help structure and monitor the management plan for the park.

In the cases of both the monument and the BLM land reassessments, Lemmon said that the Interior Department's commitment to encouraging public involvement has been a positive one.

Lemmon said that Orton was pleased to get a solid commitment from the administration.

Millions to be spent on closed bases

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — San Diego's Naval Training Center opened a new $5.1 million chapel just in time to hold graduation for the facility's last recruit class. The base closes next year.

The Army's Fort Sheridan near Chicago, Ill., officially closed three years ago. Yet, construction on a $3.3 million addition to classroom buildings used by the Navy is scheduled to begin soon.

And in Orlando, Fla., the Navy just spent more than $13 million to build a dining hall and personnel center on a base slated to close in two years. Sailors have never set foot in the mess hall; it was turned over to the U.S. Customs Service. And the city is slated to get the other building.

All across the country, even after the government made the tough decisions to close military bases, the Pentagon is spending hundreds of millions of dollars for construction on those very bases.

Critics contend many of the expenditures are just wasteful.

"They defeat the whole purpose of closing bases, which is to save money," said Sean Paige, spokesman for the group Citizens Against Government Waste.

The Pentagon notes that even while it officially terms some bases closed, portions are still used by the service that originally occupied it, by another branch of the military or by another government agency.

And the Pentagon's director of installations, Doug Hansen, defending the projects, said many were contracted before bases went on the closure list, the work was being done on land being transferred to other agencies or the Pentagon simply did not want to leave buildings half-finished.

The Defense Department could not provide an exact figure on construction spending for largely defunct bases, but a Pentagon study last year of some of the projects — slated to cost $471 million — showed nearly $263 million of them were continued.

Comparing three years of Pentagon construction budget records with base closure lists, The Associated Press reviewed a sample of more than $70 million in construction on closing or officially closed bases. The projects ranged from new barracks and renovated gymnasiums to new sewage plants, fire stations and training facilities.

The Pentagon's base-closure guidelines require the services to evaluate construction projects at facilities slated for closing to determine whether they should go forward.

The Pentagon reported last December that some $974 million in Navy construction was canceled or suspended. Hundreds of millions of Army and Air Force projects also were canceled, officials said.

"We think the screening process worked pretty well," said Navy Capt. Larry Anderson, a Pentagon engineer who reviewed projects.

Hansen said it sometimes costs more to break contracts than to continue the work. Most of the axed projects had not yet been contracted out.

Experts say military contracts contain termination clauses that would make the government responsible for builders' costs for materials, labor and profit margin, but they questioned whether the costs would exceed the project's price tag.

"That sounds a little strange," said Paul Caggiano at the Coalition for Government Procurement, which studies Pentagon contracting.

The AP's review found dozens of projects that made it through the screening process.

Tests on vaccine near completion

I spray vaccine be alternative arly flu shots

Americans would get an alternative to and proponents foresee more people ited against the flu's yearly miseries. vaccine does have advantages," Dr. lacuzio of the National Institutes of in an interview Tuesday during a meet- national flu experts. people, the flu causes fever, aches, chills d miseries that put them into bed for a But influenza can be deadly, causing and other complications that kill some 20,000 Americans each year. Many of the elderly, heart patients and others at high risk don't get vaccinated. A flu shot every October is about 70 percent effective at either preventing the virus or ensuring a milder bout. Now scientists are searching for better protection, on Tuesday outlining research into everything from genetically engineered vaccines that could be brewed faster than today's laborious shots to nasal vaccines using influenza antigens never before tried. Aviron Inc.'s nasal vaccine — which uses a live but weakened flu virus instead of the killed virus in today's shots — is the furthest in development. Some 1,000 children ages one to six, an age group where flu runs rampant, are being enrolled at 10 medical centers nationwide for final testing, said Aviron researcher Dr. Paul Mendelman. Half will get Aviron's vaccine squirted up their noses, while the rest get a squirt of placebo. If the flu spray proves effective, Aviron, based in Mountain View, Calif., hopes to have Food and Drug Administration approval to sell it for the 1999 flu season, Mendelman said. In an earlier, smaller study of adults, the nasal vaccine appeared 85 percent effective at preventing flu, Mendelman told Tuesday's meeting. Side effects were minor, including headache, runny nose and cough. Today's shots are made of killed flu virus, with a different cocktail brewed to protect against each year's strains, such as the particularly harsh Wuhan flu expected this winter. Aviron's nasal vaccine, in contrast, is made of live virus weakened enough so it won't sicken people even as it alerts the immune system to fight influenza. Some of the world's most effective vaccines are made of live viruses, including measles and polio vaccines, noted the NIH's lacuzio. Also, because the spray is easier to administer than injections that must be given by health-care workers, "it could widen the numbers who get vaccinated, especially kids," lacuzio said. Simply squirt half of a small vial up each nostril, Mendelman said, demonstrating the syringe. The nasal vaccine was created almost 30 years ago by a University of Michigan scientist in the form of nose drops. NIH studies found the technology was safe and appeared effective. The government licensed the technology to Aviron, which decided to develop a spray vaccine instead of the nose drops.

Seddon of the husetts Eye and Ear ry and Harvard Medical after quitting, former smok- faced up to double the risk ng the condition, the new found.

"Since the risks decrease very slowly — if at all — over time, it's even perhaps of greater importance not to start in the first place," said Dr. William G. Christen of Harvard-affiliated Brigham and Women's Hospital. In advanced macular degeneration, which affects one of every 14 people age 75 or older, the center of the visual field deteriorates, causing a roughly circular area of blindness that grows larger gradually. The deterioration is caused by damage to the macula lutea, the center of the retina, a light-sensitive membrane on the inside back of the eyeball. The damage occurs when an insulating layer between the retina and blood vessels that nourish it breaks down, resulting in fluid leaks and scarring. Smoking may speed the process by increasing the number of damaging chemical compounds or reducing the number of protective nutrients delivered by the bloodstream to the eye, researchers speculate. Another theory is that smoking reduces blood and oxygen to the eye. Seddon led researchers who looked for macular degeneration among 31,843 initially healthy women during a 12-year period beginning in 1980 in the ongoing Nurses' Health Study. In 215 cases that developed, the disease caused vision loss; almost one-third of those cases were attributable to smoking, researchers said.

No crisis: FDIC saves S&L

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. adopted rules Tuesday to revive the savings and loan deposit insurance fund by having thrifts and some banks make a one-time payment of $4.5 billion. The unanimous vote by the five-member FDIC board came about a week after Congress passed bank reform legislation to rescue the Savings Association Insurance Fund. The law eliminated the possibility of additional taxpayer financing for the thrift crisis, which is expected to ultimately cost taxpayers about $481 billion. It also shored up a deposit insurance fund that customers at the nation's 1,981 S&Ls depend on to protect their savings. The SAIF covers losses up to $100,000 if a thrift fails. The SAIF had become shaky as more thrifts either converted to banks or went out of business, leaving fewer S&Ls around to make annual payments. Large payments on S&L rescue bonds also drained revenue from the SAIF. Despite the insurance fund's problems, the S&Ls financial nightmare of the 1980s has largely ended. The industry now is healthy enough to shoulder much of the one-time $4.5 billion SAIF rescue payment. The FDIC oversees the separate deposit insurance funds for banks and S&Ls. Congress passed the SAIF rescue after hearing repeated warnings of a brewing crisis in the S&L industry: a huge mismatch between the insurance rates charged to banks and thrifts. The bank insurance fund, which is at record strength, charges healthy commercial banks only a minimal maintenance fee, while the SAIF insurance fee was 23 cents for each $100. To save money, S&Ls were rapidly converting to commercial banks, thereby taking advantage of a huge savings for deposit insurance. In the second quarter, thrifts with $2.5 billion in deposits jumped ship to become banks. If this mismatch between the S&L and bank fees persisted, regulators feared most healthy thrifts would convert to banks, leaving only a handful of marginal S&Ls left to pay into the SAIF. Roger Watson, the FDIC's director of research, said the SAIF plan was the culmination of a "three-year effort on the part of the FDIC, administration and the Congress to avert what could have become another crisis in the deposit insurance system." The FDIC-approved rules levy a special one-time fee on S&Ls and some banks to bring the deposit fund to its target level of $1.25 per $100 in deposits.

"Echoes of Truth" Sarah Hafen, First Place

I explained to her that the big building on our left was the Library and that the sculpture that fanned out on our right was the "Tree of Life." I always thought it appropriate that the Library, our campus "Tree of Knowledge" was right across from the "Tree of Life." She took in all of the details, her eyes wide at both the students she saw around her as well as the buildings. A few more steps and we were in front of the JKHB. In her curious, 5-year-old way, she wanted to continue her personal tour of BYU.

"Aunt Sarah, why are there so many people walking into this building?"

"They're students," I responded.

"What are they doing in there? Are they sleeping?"

I hesitated this time with my answer, unsure of how much truth to reveal. She had just started kindergarten and was about to learn all she really needed to know. I would wait for life to teach her the full response. "No, they go to classes inside that building."

"Oh..." I could tell a small web of connections was forming behind her amber eyes. "So they go in that building to learn good things... so they'll choose the right... so that they can go to the temple?" Now I was the one with wide eyes.

We kept walking hand in hand, but I wanted to kneel down to her level and see the campus from her perspective again. The logical proof she had just formed was completely obvious to her, but I kept trying to grasp how she had made the leap between a bunch of students scurrying into a class in the Humanities Building and the temple. I imagined that as some Family Home Evening on some Monday evening, when it probably seemed too late and not quick enough to finish the lesson before the treat melted, two BYU graduates who were now parents applied what they had learned about the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge to teaching their small children. I'm sure they had no idea what was going on behind those amber eyes of hers, but Sarah Anne was gaining the seeds of what would enable her to see BYU's mission for what it really is. Through a series of what must have seemed like an endless repetition of basic lessons about life and the gospel, her parents had taught Sarah Anne and her two little brothers about the relationship between education, making good choices and going to that place symbolically representative of the celestial continuum of education and wise decision making.

While Sarah Anne and I walked past trees, literal and figurative, students buzzed around us, all of them sowing seeds, whether they knew it or not — many colors of conversation that would turn into subjects for essays or sacrament meeting talks, a greeting tossed off to a school-wearied friend, the creation of pathways of comings and goings of ideas and language and good or bad grades — all of these seeds turning into a tree which resembled the seed from which it grew. The Tree of Life has now been uprooted to make more room for storing the knowledge of the Library, and now it stands a little closer to the religion building. This tree, such a convenient meeting place for friends or for back-leaning, was also a backdrop to battles of bands or nap-taking or the eating of a sack lunch thrown together milliseconds before an eight o'clock class. In looking at the statue now firmly rooted into its new spot, I noticed that it actually has a plaque next to it which says: "Tree of Wisdom. Donated by the graduating class of 1975." I'd never noticed that the term "Tree of Life" was a misnomer. But I like the idea that we inadvertently switch the names of "The Tree of Life" and "The Tree of Knowledge," turning the roots of our tree into a meshing of life and knowledge — a sort of grafting of Eden's most symbolic forces.

On another day, walking near that same spot, past the Tree, past the JKHB, my feet and mind felt as though they were being grafted into the pavement. Both were unwilling to move or to grow upward. A day of too many thoughts and not enough sleep to support them was transforming my body into hunched shoulders and a furrowed brow. I remember sitting in a class where students spoke of the risks of letting our education become "too spiritual," or, in other words, of letting the "Tree of Life" outweigh the "Tree of Knowledge." I looked downward as I made my way to my car, realizing that my present state wouldn't lend itself to an effective performance at my job in a few minutes. I was supposed to instruct some missionaries at the MTC on how they could most successfully use their testimony of those same concepts of Life and Knowledge to grow their own trees in the fields of their missions. I kept trying to talk myself into believing that I could relax enough and shake off the stress of school enough to actually share something spiritual or meaningful, but my inner negotiations weren't working.

Then a scenario that repeats itself every hour on the hour made me one of its receivers. The tower that blends in so well with the rocky patchwork of the mountains behind it began to play the familiar bells. I heard the tones of the bells and my mind sang, "Though hard to you this journey may appear, But with joy we'll find our way... We'll find the place which God for us prepared... All is Well. All is Well." It was as if someone had just tapped me on the shoulder and said, "Don't try and separate your education into parts." I had left that class confused because for me, though the trees may look separate from above ground, their roots are so intertwined that they weave in and out of each other, giving the other a vital framework. But as I listened to those familiar Carrillon bells, I knew I wasn't alone in my wanderings. And more than that, I knew that the things I was doing inside the JKHB were seeds designed to keep me on the path that would lead me to that God who was accompanying me through the vending way. The Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge were to be grafted together forming the bond between my overmourned mind and my undernourished heart. I didn't need to fear letting my education become too spiritual because education at its essence has spiritual roots. Only when we allow the trees of our spiritual life and our knowledge became one, their branches intersecting at different moments and at different levels, do we fully understand what Sarah Anne said about the moral of the story about wandering into classrooms and out into the world beyond them.

"Teaching Charity" Brooks Briggs, Second Place

Teaching Charity

While matching a list of names with a sea of new faces, my mind cranked like a Rubick's Cube in the hands of a blind man: Are my discussion topics lined up? Is my purpose square? Will this really work? English 115 is a required course a course — a course that many students dread — and the question of how to teach has frequently robbed me of sleep. Having students recognize the value of textual analysis, research, and negotiation skills can be very challenging. My first year teaching was tough; this, my second year, didn't seem to be much easier. Taking a deep breath, I stood and walked to the chalkboard. There I wrote CHARITY in large, capped letters. "Can anyone tell me what charity means?" For a moment there was a vast, frightening silence.

My freshman year, I was very nervous about my grade on my research paper. More than that, I was nervous about the comments that Clark, my writing teacher, might put in the margins, things like awk or rip? or maybe even the granddaddy of all comments, the ever-devastating huh? I'd seen the damage done on previous drafts; he left no stone unturned. Not only that, Clark seemed to have targeted me for the class exhibit of "things you shouldn't do." Things like, well... turning in handwritten rough drafts.

"Oh, I thought 'rough draft' meant it could be handwritten," I said.

"Nope."

This was only my first mistake.

Just one more sign of freshman incompetence, one more omen indicating I shouldn't be in a BYU honors class, I thought. Talking with some of my classmates, it seemed everyone came from a California school for the gifted or had a scholarship named after the president of the church or both. And me, I was from Annabella, Utah; I graduated with a class of 68 students. What had I ever done of significance?

In spite of my small-town failings, Clark and I hit it off fairly well. So, for my first paper I decided to take a big chance not only with my grade, but with the little faith I had in myself. I decided to forgo the traditional 5-paragraph essay for something a bit more creative, something a bit more narrative. In a word: John Guigild.

In my assigned "Who Am I?" essay, the great British actor suddenly materializes in a seat next to me and, after a brief interrogation, whisks us back to view my younger self in hopes of determining who I really was. A Dickens rip-off? Sure, but I figured, hey, who could resist John Guigild. And as it turned out, Clark liked it.

But my second paper, the behemoth research paper, Clark didn't like so much. Maybe it was because I turned in only four pages of an uncompleted draft. I had made the mistake of choosing a topic far too big for a first-year research paper, and I couldn't complete it on time. Already 10 minutes past the deadline, I put it in his box at his office. So imagine my surprise when, a week later, while studying on the lawn in front of the Testing Center, I looked up and saw him standing over me.

"Hey," he said, "Whatcha doing?"

"Studying for a test."

"I'm going to see a film at International Cinema. Have you ever been?" I shook my head. "Want to come along?" I looked at my watch, weighed my options, and packed my books.

The movie was an Andrei Tarkovsky film called "The Sacrifice." It was the strangest film I had ever seen, and I told him so.

"I don't get it," I said, my eyes adjusting to the light. "It didn't make much sense."

Clark nodded. "Well," he said, "who said something had to make sense to be beautiful?"

I hadn't seen him since the colloquium class I took freshman year, but I recognized the professor's bowed profile scanning the shelves of the Bookstore, the horned-rimmed glasses, the white crew-cut, the sloping shoulders beneath a collared, wind dress shirt. He always seemed a quiet window opening to an earlier decade, a decade when my father struggled with zoology and Ernest L. Wilkinson had yet to become a building on campus. Now the good professor was an English department emeritus — a Latin word which, roughly translated, means "now you can read all the time, professor." Having finished a cursory scan of book titles, I watched him labor in front of me toward an exit. I doubted he would remember me, but I decided to approach him anyway. I wanted to know how — and what — he was doing now. I called out to him.

He stopped, shifted his body around. "Yes?" he said.

"My name is Brooks and —"

"Oh yes! Yes!"

"I was a student in your Honor's Colloquium —"

"Of course, of course! Sure! I remember. Sure."

He looked thinner. Then I remembered a discussion after my mission with a friend I knew: my freshman year, a girl I knew from that same colloquium course. This aging professor was the man who had chaired her master's thesis committee but became seriously ill midway through. She had suggested that someone else chair her committee so he could concentrate on recovering, but he insisted on seeing her through to the end, even when he couldn't get out of bed.

"How are you?" I asked.

"Fine, fine. Just stopped in to buy a book," he said. He mentioned his wife had slipped on the ice earlier that month, seriously bruising her hip. Now, he said, it seemed it was his turn to care for her. But he wasn't much interested in talking about himself.

"What are you doing now?" he asked. "Are you still going to school?"

Yes, I said, a masters with a creative writing emphasis. But I was struggling with my work, especially poetry. I had never written any before.

"Well, bring some of it by," he said. "I'd love to help."

"I'm sure your busy with your wife, and I —"

"No, no," he insisted. "Bring it by! I've been working on some poetry myself lately. Feel free to stop by anytime. I'd love to help."

I nodded and thanked him, then told him when I had anything worth looking at, I'd stop by. Okay, he said, and we parted. I watched him work slowly toward an exit, new books in hand. His wife would be waiting.

My class listened courteously as I finished working through a student's concept formulation exercise for the word charity. The exercise was an adaptation of a similar process I'd learned from a now-retired philosophy professor. It was a fairly advanced exercise for a freshman English course, but I figured they could handle the challenge if I explained it clear enough.

"So the context you chose is, in this case —" I opened the Bible on my desk — "is I Corinthians 13: 'Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am as a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.'"

"And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." I looked up from the text. "Well, you've got the prerequisites and the constituents, its opposites — looks like you've about covered all the bases. Go ahead and read what your final definition is." This request always makes the students squeamish.

"Read it out loud?" he asked.

"Yeah," I said. "Read it so that we all can hear it, please. It's your personal definition that counts."

"Amazing Kane" Bill Bunn, Third Place

Let me tell you one thing right now, man, I'm not Mormon," were the first words out of my roommate's mouth. His name was Kane Fisher (the name alone is mysterious), a stocky, coarse-haired, half-Eskimo, half-Turkish freshman from Las Cruces, New Mexico. Kane was definitely not my idea of the ideal roommate. I'm not sure what I was expecting, but as I watched Kane use his tennis racket as a guitar to jam to the sounds of U2, I wondered about that little personality card I filled out before coming to Helaman Halls. Was this the guy who best matched me? Who was in charge of the roommate matching anyway?

He told me that the only reason he came to BYU was because a bunch of his friends were Mormon and they all came, so he did. He liked to call himself a "Sko," which was short for Eskimo, and prided himself on the fact that some Eskimo organization was giving him money for school which he jokingly called the "bucks for brown skin" program. Kane was immediately popular in the dorm, mainly because of his rebel attitude. He was an outsider and he loved it. He only lasted one year at BYU for reasons I'll explain later, but while he was here he profoundly touched my life and the lives of about 30 other Chipman Hall residents.

Despite all Kane's codes of coolness, one night he confessed to me his one regret. All he needed to do to get his Eagle Scout Award was the "stupid" project, and he didn't do it. He left Las Cruces without doing the project and it was eating at him. I was amazed. He was a Boy Scout? This rebel without doing the project and it was eating at him. I was amazed. He was a Boy Scout? This rebel without doing the project and it was eating at him. I was amazed. He was a Boy Scout? This rebel without doing the project and it was eating at him. I was amazed.

Kane decided that he was going to get his Eagle Scout Award. No prodding mothers, no caring priest quorum advisers, no nothing. He first had to join a local scout troop and pay his membership fee. He then decided that for his project he would construct some erosion bars on Y Mountain to reduce the run-off. He typed up his project and submitted it for approval. I sat and watched in amazement. I did my Eagle project about a year earlier, and my mom did everything for me: all I had to do was show up. Kane had to do everything. He even called the grounds crew guys to borrow shovels and picks. In all, Kane had about 29 guys up there digging 20-foot trenches and filling them with rocks while he went around and took pictures for the final "Board of Review" report. About a month later I gave the "Eagle Challenge" at Kane's Court of Honor. I remember telling him that he truly was a leader and to continue to fly with the eagles. He didn't have a scout uniform to wear, so the Scout Master pinned the Eagle on his suit coat.

Kane was special. He had come through the doorway into adulthood before I had and showed me that it could be done, and done with style. I'll never forget the way Kane and I were both jamming with our tennis rackets during "Loud Hour" at Chipman Hall. Between songs Kane looked at me and asked, "So, Bill, do you want to baptize me?" I was shocked. I had forgotten that we sent the missionaries to him about two months earlier as a joke and he had been secretly taking the discussions. I got all choked up. "Sure," I said, and punched him.

My story of Kane doesn't end like I wished it would. His mom went berserk when she found out that Kane wanted to be baptized and threatened to

And seeing as how I had no radio e, I spent most of the drive thinking, watching the king, watching the broad end of Ashly's van, and some more.

Provo and yank him out of joined. Kane had to put off for a while, but the impres-ide on me was lasting. Not take the initiative to get his he was making lasting rel-ions.

ane's story typifies the mis- adation of BYU. No one d to get Kane to become a member of the church, but the atmos-phere here caused him to want to become a part of the whole. I think what intrigued Kane about BYU was how everyone wanted to improve. Basically, we are a bunch of people trying to do our best. Whether we are trying to do our secular or religious best, we are trying. This earnestness is very appealing and causes students and faculty to strive for excellence. To me and many others, Kane was an example of excellence of someone on the outside. He caused us to step back and appreciate the world we just smiled and walked away.

And I still wasn't thinking about anything beyond that building. I stood there a moment listening to his steps echo down the corridor. Who was he? Would I even know him if I saw him again? No. No, I wouldn't.

I took the sandwich and walked toward the building that held the class that I was some how destined not to starve through. It was then that I started to think about Italy, about Rome, about a beautiful summer's mid-morning. I was only visiting Italy — studying there. There were twenty or so of us students from BYU lead about by an all too adoring professor who for some reason beyond any of our comprehen-sion had brought us to a graveyard.

But the day was beautiful. And after wandering the rows of well kept graves and polished monuments, I sat on a long flight of stairs that looked over the largest plot of grass I had seen in the whole of that country. I just sat there and watched — watched the clear blue sky and the sun as it glinted off the marble wings of the angels that surrounded me.

It was then that I met the little old man whose few English words have stuck with me. I don't know why he picked me, or why I listened to him. But he did, and I did. However, there are only two specific things I can remember about that conversation. The first being totally irrelevant — a discussion of my ethnic origin (I am German and British, he would not accept that and kept insisting I was from the French Riviera or Greece — maybe Spain). The second being this: if you want to under-stand a people, a culture, a race. . . go to their graveyards, go see how they treat their dead. And from a knowledge of that end, you can start to understand their begin-nings.

It was that second point that I was thinking about as I sat to eat. It was the thought of those who have gone before us, prepared this place for us, and left with us their names. . . that was what made one tear slip out (but if you ask me, I won't admit that I cried) as I prayed over that dollar and quarter sandwich. Somehow in my mind, I could see the name of this University and the man it was named after. I thought of the building I sat in and whose name it bears.

Then I thought of the boy who just spent a dollar and a quarter to buy a stranger a bit of food, and all of this became obvious. I thought of the boy and the name I will never know, the one he carries and that he is called by. I thought of the name he must also carry, the name he may have taken as I once took — that given to us at baptism, that given to us through faith, that which gives us the title of Christian. By giving away a small bit of change, I wonder at the names he honored. I wonder where he comes from, who his parents and grandparents are, and who might meet him on the other side and praise him for the honor he gave his name — whatever name that is.

"Thank you. I. . ." I stumbled over words. I pushed the dollar and quarter I had been holding in my hand at him as if to say I have the money. All I could get out of my mouth was a, "please, let me pay for it." He shook his head, smiled shyly and said simply, "no." I tried again. This time he

I stood to dust the crumbs of synthetic wheat bread off my clothes and laugh at myself as I walked to the trash can. It was only a dollar twenty-five. It was only a lit-tle thing, a thing any of us could have done — a thing any of us would have done. It was only a dollar twenty-five. Maybe.

But only maybe, because then I had to think of my name, of my strong German grandfather, of my British roots, and of all those that I have learned to love and never known — those who have lent me their names. I thought of this university that will for the rest of my life lend its name to me also. I wonder what I will do with it, I wonder what I have done with it already.

Wherever I will go and whatever I will do, however, there is one thing I know now. There will be moments I will remember the little gifts she has given me: the smiles of strangers, the fraternity of the gospel, the knowledge of the wise and the ancients, and the sound of footsteps fading in the distance, echoing through the corridor of an empty building. . . the footsteps of a boy whose name I will never forget.

"The Campus is Our World?" Channpal Singh

Under the idealistic words portraying Brigham Young's dream — "The World Is Our Campus" — looking out on the hoard of cars on Campus Boulevard with the soft moisture of the green grass beginning to surround me, I sat there reflecting on this motto of his university. Is it just a dream or a foreshadowing of a reality? Even more so, is it a reality? "The World Is Our Campus," — what does it mean? What does it entail, and most of all how far has this noble phrase been lived?

An Indian proverb claims that the search for charity begins at home. Before we try to make the world our campus, I think we need to reflect on our own house — BYU. Seeing a turbaned nineteen-year-old Sikh with a beard, many people ask me why I came to BYU. My response is, "I learn each day the answer to that question." What follows is an inter-religious dialogue in which I hope to establish the things that differentiate me from a Latter-day Saint. Within this difference lies the reverence and adoration for each other as disciples on the same journey from two different starting points. It is akin to viewing two different light bulbs, each in their own place and location, yet deriving their power from the same powerhouse. Though the wires are different, they journey from the same power source. The analogy establishes (in a small manner) both the differences and commonalities between a Sikh and a Latter-day Saint.

I am sorry to say that many of those with whom I talk embrace the commonalities but completely ignore the differences. This uneasiness about accepting conflicting ideas results in the statement, "Well, essentially you and I are the same," whereas, what makes me and a Latter-day Saint disciples is fundamentally different. If someone decides to point out the differences, those differences are rejected because if we are not the same, then we obviously cannot be on the same path. I think because of the Latter-day Saint uneasiness with differences many of my nonmember friends do not associate with the Mormons.

Is it possible for a Sikh to open his arms to his Mormon brothers and sisters without receiving this response? Can a Southern Baptist voice his opinion on the Book of Mormon in a Religion 121 class without being chastised for it? Can a Sikh amongst thirty thousand Latter-day Saints be what Guru Gobind Singh wanted him to be—a Saint in his own right? Can the link of sainthood between an Orthodox Christian and a Mormon exist with understanding? Can a Muslim at the "Lord's university" hold his beliefs without being chuckled at?

These are the differences that we find in the world. Understanding and accepting these differences is an integral part of making the world our campus because it is both the differences from and the commonalities with one's own beliefs that constitute a religion. To comprehend any religion one must comprehend the differences as well as the commonalities. Thus, one must not only accept the commonalities but the differences, because recognizing one or the other by itself results in ignorance. These differences help us define our culture and beliefs.

As a Sikh, I can claim that I have a stronger conviction about my beliefs by living within this admirable community of Latter-day Saints than I had for the first seventeen years of my life. I have re-defined my values and beliefs by understanding both the differences and similarities inherent within The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Sikhism. Moreover, it is within this inseparable package of commonality and difference that I have found my own religion while acknowledging and rejoicing in the faith and conviction of Latter-day Saints for their religion.

Unfortunately, there is a tendency for BYU students to amalgamate another's beliefs into a set of commonalities held within their own beliefs. They gloss over the differences as irrelevant and unnecessary. However, it is precisely this separation of differences and commonalities that creates the divergence between a nonmember and a Latter-day Saint.

Consequently, this separation of differences leads us to deny other truths because each truth carries with it both what we know (commonalities) and what we don't know (differences). If truth did not contain what we don't know (difference), then truth would cease to exist, for there would be no need for it. Therefore, there is a need first to recognize and then accept the differences inherent in someone's beliefs because this acceptance sparks the celebration of two disciples as they discover how they are both similar and different.

Only if we recognize the importance of differences, can we begin to answer the questions that I raised in the beginning of the paper. The university is only going to provide us with different approaches to understanding what it means and entails for the world to be our campus. The laborious task of self-scrutiny lies within us as we sprout the idea of renewing and enriching ourselves with our own beliefs and that of others. That is when we will begin to answer the more practical questions raised in the latter part of the paper. In doing so, we would have the honor of uttering those sacred words that we "enter to learn (in the Lord's university) and go forth to serve (all of humanity)." Otherwise that lofty view of the world as our campus will remain nothing more than a thought plagued with the misunderstanding that "The Campus Is OUR World."

Yellow fever makes alarming comeback; African officials appeal for financial aid

Medical officials ask for $190 million for routine vaccinations

Associated Press

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — Yellow fever is making an alarming comeback in sub-Saharan Africa, prompting medical officials to appeal for $190 million to control the disease that causes high fevers, vomiting and death.

A study in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association found 18,735 yellow fever cases worldwide — including 4,522 deaths — from 1987 to 1991. It said this was the highest incidence of the disease since 1948.

The study was conducted by Dr. Susan E. Robertson and colleagues from the World Health Organization in Geneva.

While reported cases of the virus dropped in 1992 and 1993, they have shot up again in West Africa, most notably Cameroon, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone.

Yellow fever has not been reported in North America since 1905, when an outbreak in Louisiana killed some 1,000 people, according to the report. But the yellow fever mosquito has recently made its way to the southeastern United States.

Yellow fever, which is spread by mosquitoes, is one of the most difficult viruses to diagnose and therefore goes underreported. WHO estimates there are 200,000 yellow fever cases each year, with nearly all in sub-Saharan Africa.

"Many are in major urban areas in Africa and that's the real danger, that's where you have explosive potential for epidemics which could really be devastating," said Michael Luhan, a WHO spokesman.

There is no cure or specific treatment for yellow fever. Doctors can only relieve dehydration and other effects of the disease.

The U.N. health agency has launched an appeal for $190 million for yellow fever vaccines that would be incorporated into routine inoculation programs.

"It's a very deadly disease and that's precisely why WHO is so concerned about it," Luhan said. "Even though the numbers right now are not as dramatic as others, the potential for morbidity is far greater."

In South America, Peru had the largest yellow fever outbreak in the region since 1950, with 440 cases and 167 deaths last year, according to the study. It blames the increase on the "Aedes aegypti" mosquito, which has made its way to cities.

Yellow fever causes high fever, severe vomiting and dehydration in the early stages. If the virus reaches the toxic phase, at least half of the victims fall into a coma and die within two weeks.

The yellow fever vaccine offers a 95 percent protection rate. But in the poorest corners of Africa, where civil war, blazing heat and high humidity combine with poor sanitary conditions and stagnant water, villages far removed from national inoculation programs become viral incubators.

Benin, for example, reported Tuesday that 50 people have died of yellow fever since July in the remote northwest.

"This epidemic is due to the lack of information," said Emile Akowanou, a spokesman for the Benin health ministry. "People just aren't informed as to prevention measures."

Triathlon open to students, community

By ERIKA WILDE
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU Student Leadership Involvement Center offers a chance for BYU students and community members to swim, bike and run their way to prizes. The fourth semi-annual triathlon competition will be hosted Oct. 19 at 8 a.m. on BYU campus.

SLIC student co-directors, Justin Anderson and Steve Wilson, look forward to filling the heats of this year's race.

"We've got a lot of great sponsors," Anderson says, citing examples such as Extreme Sports Bar, Runner's Corner, Gourmet Bicycles and others. Food and a drawing for prizes will be available for the volunteers and spectators. "We hope to draw a record crowd this year," said Anderson.

This year's race, following tradition, will offer competitors a choice of three different levels of competition. A total of 64 entries for the sprint length triathlon are expected as well as 16 elite entries and an expanded team entry slot of 32. Any gender combination qualifies for the team division.

The first heat, beginning at 8 a.m., will feature the elite-level racers. The 16 elite competitors, accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis, will begin the triathlon with a 1.6-kilometer pool swim at the Richards Building. The competitors will then cycle to Bridal Veil Falls (40 kilometers) in Provo Canyon — twice, followed by a 10-kilometer run around campus.

The sprint and team divisions will begin their heats around 8:45 a.m. and follow the same course as the elite — only shorter. The sprint and team divisions features a 0.8-kilometer swim, a 26-kilometer bike ride and a 5-kilometer run.

Registration will take place at 347 ELWC until the divisions are full. The entry fee is $20 for the sprint heats, $25 for the elites and $15 per team member. Upon registration, the competitor will receive a t-shirt, information packet and sponsor's gifts.

For Heiners, running is in the blood

By ERIKA WILDE
Universe Sports Writer

For two BYU students, running on the cross country team really is a matter of blood — not just sweat and tears. Sisters Jessica and Cammie Heiner, from Clifton, Va., are running fast for their family name. Because for the Heiner sisters, running is a way of life.

Racing together isn't a new thing for the Heiner sisters — Jessica and Cammie have been running together since high school. And so has half the Heiner family. Cammie and Jessica have a sister who is a junior in high school and a sophomore brother who runs also. Their parents are "really into it," says Jessica. "In two years you can do another story about three sisters on the BYU team."

At Centerville High School, where the two began their fruitful running careers, Jessica and Cammie both won the Virginia state championship for the 1600 meters their senior years in track.

"I always planned on running track," Jessica says, but claims she never planned on being a cross country runner. However, she started running cross country with a friend — but didn't enjoy it. "I was going to quit, but then I just kept going," Jessica says. Eventually she started winning cross country racing — so she "liked it more."

Cammie, aside from winning a matching 1600 state championship with her sister, placed 2nd at state in the 1000 meters with one of the fastest times in the nation. Cammie's winning streak, however, proved to be one of the adjustments she has had to make to enter collegiate competition.

"You go from being the very top to not knowing how you'll do," Cammie said of the collegiate competition.

Jessica's choice to attend BYU has helped Cammie make the same decision. "I didn't just come here to run," Jessica says, citing good classes and LDS standards as other persuasive factors. But BYU's championship team was the final decider, she said.

Cammie says that Jessica's "two year head-start helps her running. 'If I'm feeling discouraged, I can talk to Jessica,'" says Cammie. She says that Jessica's running experience at BYU has made the transition from high school to college easier. In addition to Jessica, Cammie has found friendship with all her teammates.

"I really love the team. It's like having automatic friends," Cammie said.

But does having a sister on the same team make it all easy?

"I guess if she suddenly started beating me, it would be hard," Jessica said, laughing.

With two more years of experience than Cammie, Jessica has never been beaten by her younger sister in an official race. "It's not like a big competitive problem," Jessica says. "It's all good."

But Cammie thinks the competition will get hotter. The other team members always tease the Heiner sisters, says Cammie, saying "You guys just pound each other when you run together."

As for the Heiner sisters' predictions for the team, the two agree. They say that the BYU cross country team will win the Western Athletic Conference and place in the top 10 nationally.

Individually, Jessica's goals include racing with the BYU team at the national championship. This would require her to be one of the top eight runners on the team. "We're all really close," she says. "I want to be in the top five."

Cammie hopes to race at the nationals also, and to be one of the top seven runners.

Salt Lake wins bid to host 1999 skating national championships

Special to the Universe

Perfect. That's how Anne Marie Jensen, sports coordinator for the Salt Lake Olympic Organizing Committee (SLOC) for the 2002 Olympic Winter Games, welcomed the news that Salt Lake City has been named host city for the 1999 U.S. Figure Skating Association (USFSA) national championships.

The announcement was made following a two-day meeting of the USFSA 50-member board of directors in Colorado Springs, Colo. The SLOC jointly will host the championships with the Utah Figure Skating Club and the Salt Lake Junior League. The SLOC has established a program for early ticket reservations.

The Utah capital was a finalist in the bid effort with Portland, Ore. Both cities were visited in late September by a five-member site selection committee from the USFSA, which reported its findings at the board meeting.

Jensen expressed the delight of Salt Lake's Olympic planners because the USFSA national championships will serve as a hands-on test event for the SLOC as it prepares to stage the 2002 Games.

"It's one thing to plan and schedule events on paper, charts and calendars, and it's another to have a high-profile event with elite athletes, their coaches and trainers actually going through the paces that will be similar to when we stage the Olympics," she said. "You might call it 'real time' rehearsal for the SLOC — those responsible for athletes, officials, judges, accommodations, media, transportation, facilities, accreditation, results and hospitality."

"Not only will the 1999 national championships help fine tune Olympic officials, but they will generate excitement among the community and give area residents a sneak preview of the caliber of athletes who'll be here during the Games," Jensen added.

The Utah Figure Skating Club hosted this event in Salt Lake City in 1984 and 1990.

The week-long national championships are expected to attract 350 athletes hoping to win berths on the U.S. national team as they compete in three men's and women's divisions — senior, junior and novice, in 18 events. Salt Lake City will be required to provide USFSA one primary 15,000-seat arena and two other arenas that will be used for practice.

Jensen said the Delta Center would be the site of the 1999 national championships. "The people at the Delta Center have been very helpful and very supportive of our efforts to win the bid for these championships. We'll work the skating events around the Utah Jazz home schedule," she said. The event will be in January.

Ticket reservations can be made for all-event ticket packages for a $100 per package reservation fee that will be applied toward the total purchase once the program is announced. A package consists of all 12 events and total cost of one is estimated to range from $100 and $450. Tickets can be reserved by calling the SLOC at 801-799-2060.

Sunday and by doing so won his first pro tournament in five tries. I am happy for him. He has an enormous amount of talent. But 27-under par? I wonder if I could have shot under par at that golf course.

Nobody is more excited than me for the National Hockey League to begin its regular season. I love hockey. It is a sport for real men. I can't skate worth a lick but it is very enjoyable and exciting to watch these guys stop on a dime and hit some guy into the boards and not get penalized for it. I served a mission in Canada and I really learned how much people can like hockey.

The season is only a couple of days old but it is already intriguing. Of course, the most intriguing part is the reuniting of Wayne Gretzky with his old buddy Mark Messier in New York. Both of them are past their primes but no combination in the history of hockey worked as well as the Mess & Gretz connection.

Albertans are still in love with these two and the last time they played together in Edmonton was eight years ago. Having the two of them on the ice together night after night will put fans in the seats and will provide for some very nostalgic and exciting moments for the die-hard hockey fans.

One more note about the NHL. Teams are getting better but nobody has the overall firepower to overtake the Colorado Avalanche. They are solid front to back and they have by far the best playoff goalie in Patrick Roy. Just thought you might like to know.

Alas! The NBA started training camps last week. The NBA has a very large following and many of the fans like basketball and basketball only. After an off season full of free agents signing multi-million dollar contracts with new teams, it will be interesting to see who comes out on top. The Chicago Bulls are poised and ready to repeat again. There is no team out there that can hang with Jordan and the gang. They are too strong.

Will the Jazz meet them in the finals? No way. They peaked last year. Of course, along with this prediction will come contention. Don't worry, I expect it. After all, what do fans have to root for in Utah besides the Jazz?

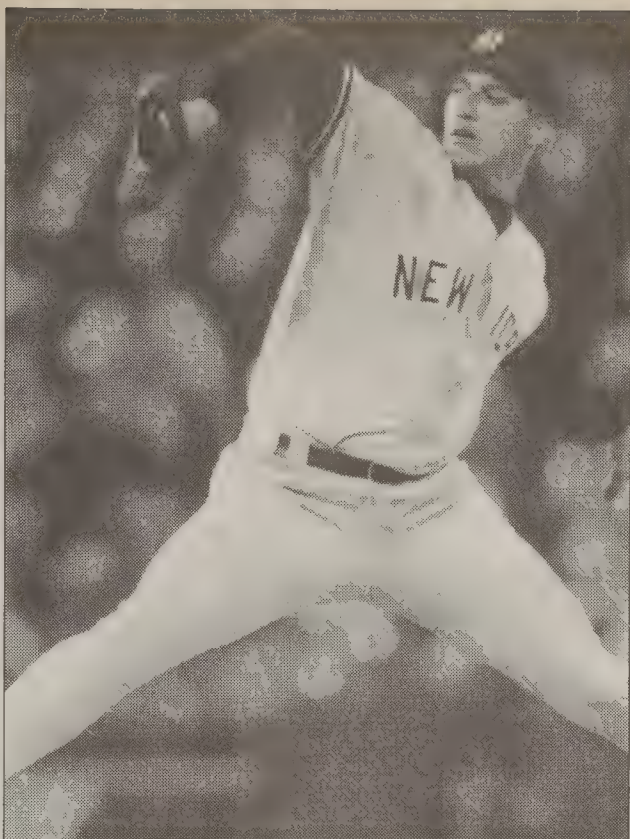

I cannot be done with this without making some mention of the massacre in Logan Friday night. I had the pleasure of roaming the sidelines with the team and some things struck me as being awfully odd. For one, BYU was beating up on the Aggies and their mouths were still running overboard. I wonder if they understand what it means to get killed in their home stadium.

I wondered one other thing. As we were pulling out of Logan, we decided to grab a bite to eat at a local establishment. I wondered what there was to do for fun in Logan. We asked the girl, and she said "There is a go-cart place, but I think it's closed."

Two things became all-so clear to me: The Cougars are better and I like Provo.

Go Cougars. Destroy the Rebels!

RUMBLE IN THE BRONX:
The New York Yankees' ace pitcher, Andy Pettitte, winds up against the Oakland Athletics last month for his 20th win. Pettitte was named by manager Joe Torre the starter of the first game in the American League Championship Series in New York. It was rained out yesterday, but they will begin play today at 2 p.m. Mountain Time.

A.L. East playoff battle rained out, they'll play today

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Andy Pettitte treated being named the Yankees' Game 1 starter with some of the same qualities that made him a 21-game winner this season — confidence and control.

Pettitte said he was surprised when New York manager Joe Torre told the left-hander he had picked him over David Cone to start the AL championship series opener against the Baltimore Orioles.

"I feel like I've pitched in a lot of big games, games where I felt more pressure than this one," Pettitte said. "I stopped a lot of losing streaks. Heck, this is an easy one. It's just the first of a seven-game series."

"It's amazing, I guess, but it really doesn't matter to me. I don't think there will be as much pressure on this start here as others I've made."

Doesn't sound like a 24-year-old, does he? Well, he doesn't pitch like one either.

Pettitte demonstrated the composure of a seasoned veteran all season for the Yankees. He compiled a 21-8 record with a 3.87 ERA, and went 13-3 in starts following Yankees' losses. It's those numbers that have made him the likely Cy Young winner.

Before the rainout, Torre said this decision to start Pettitte in the opener was based in part on Cone's limited starts since returning from surgery, and Kenny Rogers' inconsistency.

Tonight's Game 1 was postponed because of rain. The opener will be played Wednesday, starting at 4 p.m. EDT. Game 2 will be played Thursday at 3 p.m. EDT.

Cone will start Game 2 with Jimmy Key pitching Game 3 against David Wells.

With tonight's game rained out, it was unclear whether Mike Mussina or Scott Erickson would start on Wednesday.

"I'd rather have Andy (in Game 1) in case we have to come back on short rest," Torre said. "He's probably the best physically right now as far as thinking three days rest."

He's also left-handed.

The Orioles set a record this season by hitting 257 regular-season home runs. They hit eight more in the opening round as they eliminated the defending AL champion Cleveland Indians in four games.

Of those 257 homers, 50 came from left-handed hitting leadoff man Brady Anderson. Torre knows that with Pettitte on the mound, he's at least making it tougher on Anderson, Rafael Palmeiro and some of the other free-swinging lefties in the Orioles' lineup.

Dye — James Dye

BYU receiver and punt-returner extraordinaire James Dye is pictured here in last weekend's football game against Utah State University. Dye had a 79-yard punt return for a touchdown against the Aggies, bringing his average up to over 22 yards per return, good for third nationally in punt return average. For his performance, Dye was named the Western Athletic Conference's Mountain Division special teams player of the week.

Cougar golfers win Nike Classic

By Universe Services

After two days and 54 holes of golf, the BYU men's team easily won the Nike Northwest Classic Tuesday with an eight-over-par 872.

The Cougars finished five strokes better than Western Athletic Conference foe, UTEP who finished in a second-place tie with Washington at 877.

Host Oregon State finished in fourth place while San Jose State was at fifth and Weber State was 17th in the field of 18.

BYU freshman Andrew Miller and senior teammate Joe Summerhays tied for third place in the individual competition, shooting an even-par 216 over 54 holes.

Miller had rounds of 75-67-74 while Summerhays fired a 72 in each of the three rounds. Cougar sophomore Michael Henderson (73-73-72) shot a two-over-par 218 on his way to a seventh-place tie.

Other BYU scorers were freshman Jose Garrido (78-72-74) in a tie for 38th place with a three-round total of 224 while teammate Jay Auvigne (76-76-74) placed 47th with a score of 226.

New Mexico's Paul Baack topped the 93-player field with a four-under-par 212 at the Trysting Tree Golf Club to lead his team to an eighth-place finish.

The victory marked the first tournament win since the 1995 WAC Championships.

For Miller, who is the son of former BYU and PGA golfer Johnny Miller, the tournament marked the highest finish in his young collegiate career.

Weber State's scores were Michael Jacks and Hub Huetgren finishing 42nd (225) and 65th (229), respectively while teammates Russell Madsen (233), Guy Goddard (233) and Mac Barton (239).

The BYU men will travel to San Francisco, Calif., on Oct. 21, to play in the four-day USF Intercollegiate Golf Tournament.

Underdog Cards to face Atlanta juggernaut today

Associated Press

ATLANTA — From all indications, the Atlanta Braves should have an easy time of it in the National League championship series against the St. Louis Cardinals. To a man, however, the Braves all agree: Don't believe it. "It's a different game come playoff time," third baseman Chipper Jones said Monday before a workout curtailed by a steady rain. Although both clubs are coming off three-game sweeps in the opening round of the NL playoffs — the Braves over the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Cardinals defeating the San Diego Padres — Atlanta is favored because of its 9-4 edge in the regular season. The defending World Series champions have also been in three of the last four World Series, have won 14 of their last 17 postseason games and won seven straight at home. In addition, the Braves have their Big Three of John Smoltz, Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine ready and well rested. That trio gave up only two earned runs in the sweep of the Dodgers, holding the Los Angeles batters to a .140 average. Other advantages by Atlanta in the regular season: The Braves outhit St. Louis .241 to .227, out-homered them 22-9 and outscored them 67-47. Atlanta's pitchers had a 3.10 ERA, St. Louis was at 4.50. "It's all wiped away. It all starts over on Wednesday," said Braves manager Bobby Cox. The best-of-7 series opens Wednesday night with the first of two games in Atlanta before moving to St. Louis for three games, beginning on Saturday. If necessary, the final two games will be played in Atlanta. Smoltz, who scattered four hits in Atlanta's 2-1 opening game victory over Los Angeles, will start for the Braves in the opener. He was 24-8 during the regular season, 1-1 against the Cardinals. Andy Benes, who was 18-10 during the season, 1-1 against Atlanta, will start for St. Louis.

Bozo's on his way out' Dole says; civility ends

Associated Press
ST. N.J. — Under President Clinton on promised to hit harder on Clinton's ethical controversy. "Bozo's on Dole said of his rival. Clinton's integrity in Josephine cut short his back to his Washington quarters. "no good. My word is keep my promises to the people," Dole said, telling Clinton's line that would cut Medicare to his guy? What does he know? What does he know? Dole demanded at a morning rally. "In the crowd shouted to hook hands, "Please get back, "Bozo's on his

Dole spokesman Nelson Warfield sought to play down the offhand remark as a "light moment along the ropeline." But it recalled the final weeks of President Bush's 1992 losing campaign when Bush referred to Clinton and Al Gore as "two bozos" who had less foreign policy expertise than a dog. Clinton deputy campaign manager Ann Lewis took note of Sunday's civil debate between the presidential rivals and added, "I guess this means the era of civility lasted a day and a half." She said Dole's remark was "particularly glaring" given that the GOP nominee had chided Clinton on Sunday for referring to Bush during the 1992 debates as "Mr. Bush" rather than "Mr. President." White House spokesman Mike McCurry added, "It's not hard to imagine that Senator Dole might be feeling a little desperate at this point."

Dole's bus tour of this battleground state was designed to build momentum after his first debate with Clinton, in which the self-described underdog declined to question the president's ethical fitness for office. In a radio interview Tuesday, Dole said he regretted not being tougher on Clinton by questioning his involvement in the acquisition of FBI files on prominent Republicans by former White House security chief Craig Livingstone. "I mean, if the president knows so much, why doesn't he know who hired Craig Livingstone? We could have asked that question," Dole told radio host Don Imus. Dole also said he would press Clinton in next Wednesday's San Diego debate to explain his refusal to rule out pardons in the Whitewater case. "He sort of ducked the question, so we'll go back at it again," Dole promised. The GOP nominee in the first debate had chided Clinton for not simply putting the issue to rest with a "no comment" when it first came up. Dole's crowd of supporters in Lyndhurst numbered just about 300 but their spirits were high after being warmed up by remarks from former Senate Whitewater counsel Michael Chertoff, who served as U.S. attorney in New Jersey under Bush. Holding aloft a Dole-Kemp sign, Chertoff asked, "How many members of this administration had to resign in disgrace? ... President Clinton wants to build a bridge to an anything-goes future where you can get away with it as long as you can talk your way out of it." Dole spokesman Warfield joined in by evoking Clinton's former associate attorney general, Webb Hubbell, who was imprisoned for defrauding clients at his old law firm. "With friends like Webb Hubbell, it looks like a bridge to Rikers," Warfield said, referring to a city prison in New York. Warfield later pulled back when asked if Dole's campaign was turning negative.

Provo saving money upgrading lights

Associated Press
Provo, Utah, saved $36,678 in energy costs and reduced carbon emissions by more than 700 tons by changing light bulbs in city buildings. U.S. Environmental Agency's Green Lights program, said the program voluntary partnerships EPA, businesses and government agencies to reduce energy use and pollution. Lewis said participants in the program agree to assess existing lighting fixtures and look for ways to upgrade to more energy-efficient devices. Scott Glazier of Provo Energy Services said the city entered into an agreement with the EPA in April 1994. Since then, the city has changed light fixtures in City Hall, the Public Library, the Eldred Center, the recreation center, the energy department's building and the water resources building.

Among the lighting changes Provo made were replacing 196-watt fluorescent light fixtures with newer 60-watt lamps and installing 13-watt floodlights in City Hall instead of 75-150 watt lights. Glazier said the city also installed more efficient fans and cooling devices, an energy-saving pump on a city well and a computer to regulate heating and cooling systems. The upgrades cost $800,000 over two years, but the city is saving $81,000 a year on its electric bill, Glazier said. On lighting alone, he said, the city saves more than $36,000 a year.

Man charged in cheerleaders' disappearance

Associated Press
DRYDEN, N.Y. — A neighbor was charged with kidnapping two high school cheerleaders who disappeared last week while house-sitting for one of the girls' parents. Police said evidence shows the girls are dead. John Andrews was charged with first-degree kidnapping in connection with the case of Jennifer L. Bolduc of Dryden and Sarah A. Hajney of McLean, state police Maj. Arthur Hawker said today. Andrews, 31, lived next door to Hajney. Andrews was arraigned Monday night in Groton Town Court after police went to question him at the factory where he works as a computer lathe operator, state police said at a news conference Tuesday.

A kidnapping charge allows police to hold the suspect without bail, troopers said. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Friday. Although no bodies have been found, there is "sufficient physical evidence" to prove the girls, both 16, are dead, Hawker said Monday. He did not elaborate today except to say, "We have been finding human remains in various places in northern Chenango County." That evidence includes crushed bone fragments that were found at a campsite belonging to a relative of the suspect, WICB radio at Ithaca College quoted unidentified sources as saying. The bodies apparently had been crushed with some sort of instrument; bloody rags also were found at the camp, the radio quoted the sources as saying. Hawker declined to comment on the radio report. The girls, cheerleaders at Dryden High School, were last seen Friday morning by a 17-year-old male friend who was house-sitting with the girls for Hajney's parents Thursday night. The friend is not a suspect in their disappearance. The Hajney family car was found Friday in the parking lot of the Cortland Line Co. in Cortland. Workers saw a man near the car Friday afternoon. Police were investigating whether one of the girls had been harassed by a man matching that description, Hawker said.

Officials say hike Escalante before crowds do

By BRENT WOODSON
Universe Staff Writer

With the declaration of the Escalante National Monument, the State Forest Service now fears that the area may become a national park, dousing the area with an overflow of visitors.

With this threat, Lorita Spencer, of the State Forest Service, counseled Utahns to act now if they want the experience of hiking the unadulterated tracks of wilderness in the Escalante area.

Spencer said that the Calf Creek Fall hike, about 15 miles east of Escalante, is probably the most popular short hike. It's about 5.5 miles round trip, and contains an "interpretive trail" that goes along a rolling river, past beaver dams and waterfalls.

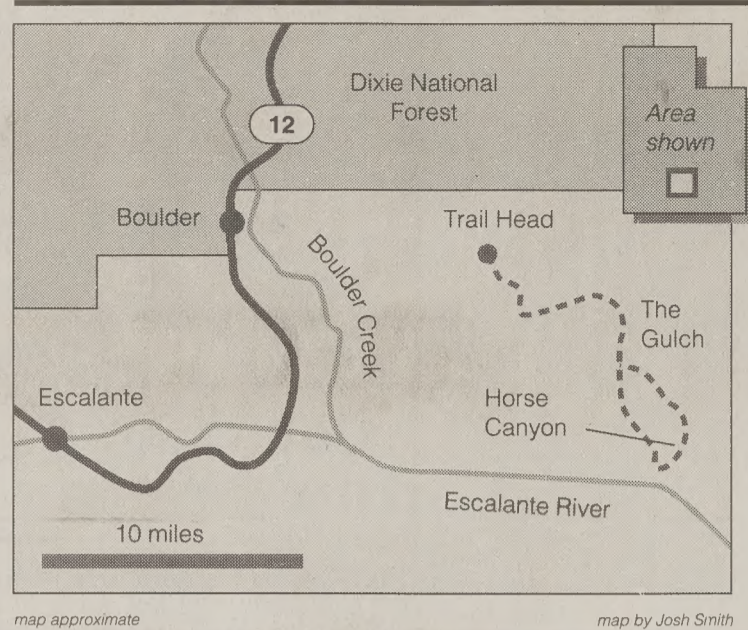

The highlight for many on this hike are the Anasazi and Fremont Indian pictographs on the canyon walls, dating back to the early 13th century, Spencer said.

Coyote Gulch is also a popular hike, though longer. It's 13 miles one way, Spencer said.

Spencer said aspects that impress visitors about the area are the natural arches, high canyon walls and the rushing waters.

Take Highway 12 to Escalante and head east for about 5 miles, to Hole In The Rock Road. The Hole In The Rock Road exit will lead to the three easiest access points to Coyote Gulch, including Red Rail, Hurricane Wash and

Hiking in the Escalante

Crack-In-Wall.

For those into a three- or four-day hike, the Escalante Loop was rated one of the best hikes in America by Men's Journal. The 30 mile loop starts at a pullout on Burr Trail.

"At every bend the place becomes more claustrophobic, yet more beautiful," wrote David Roberts, a free-lance outdoor journalist. "About six miles into the canyon you hear the narrows before you see them."

Kemp, Gore prepare to debate

Plan to 'disagree without being disagreeable'

Associated Press

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. — When asked about the possibility of running for president in four years, Al Gore hastens to end the line of inquiry. Jack Kemp shakes his head and wags an admonishing finger.

As they prepare for tonight's debate, the candidates for vice president are trying to keep the focus on Bill Clinton and Bob Dole. "It is not Al Gore vs. Jack Kemp," the GOP vice presidential nominee said Tuesday.

In pre-debate interviews with The Associated Press, Gore and Kemp predicted their 90-minute, prime-time debate would closely follow the themes of Sunday's encounter between Clinton and Dole. That exchange focused on tax policy and the state of the economy, welfare and other social policies, and on the U.S.

role abroad.

Kemp, for his part, said Dole had scored points in casting Clinton as a liberal hiding behind conservative election-year promises. Kemp promised to follow up by taking issue with a new Clinton campaign ad in which the president says he views his job as "taking care of the American people."

As they discussed their expectations for the debate and outlined their views of the vice presidency, the former House colleagues voiced friendship and respect for each other and predicted their encounter would be a civil affair.

"You can disagree without being disagreeable," Gore said Monday afternoon during a break in his debate preparations in Sarasota, where former New York Rep. Tom Downey was the Democratic stand-in for Kemp.

Kemp was interviewed Tuesday morning before a practice session in Bal Harbour, Fla., where New Hampshire GOP Sen. Judd Gregg is playing the role of Gore.

With Clinton holding a comfortable lead heading into the final weeks of the campaign, Kemp and Gore are often questioned about the possibility that they could be competitors for the presidency in four years. Both dismiss such talk as a distraction they'd rather not deal with.

"In 2000, Bob is going to be running for re-election and I just hope he keeps me on the ticket," Kemp said.

Gore responds by telling the story of a dog holding a bone in his mouth while staring at his reflection in a pond. "He wants that other bone that the other dog has, so he opens his mouth to get that other bone and he loses both bones," Gore said.

After watching Sunday night's presidential debate, and spending the past several days with campaign advisers, both Gore and Kemp entered their showdown with clear missions.

For Gore, it was to reverse any progress Dole might have made in selling his plan to cut taxes 15 percent across the board while balancing the budget by 2002 and preserving popular programs.

Kemp was most animated in discussing the new Clinton campaign ad, and promised to make it an issue tonight as he seeks to build on Dole's efforts to paint Clinton as a big-government liberal.

IRA renews its bombing campaign

Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army admitted today that it carried out the bombing of the British army's headquarters here, wounding 31 and threatening to catapult Northern Ireland back into bloodshed.

A telephone caller using a recognized codeword told the Dublin newsroom at RTE, Ireland's broadcasting network, that two 800-pound bombs had been detonated at the army complex in Lisburn, southwest of Belfast, on Monday night by IRA volunteers.

The IRA statement said the target had been personnel connected with the barracks and said injuries to any civilians were regretted.

It was the outlawed group's first bomb attack in the British-ruled province since mid-1994.

The bombings were "certainly consistent with a terrorist organization that declared an end to a cease-fire which it had proclaimed in 1994," Northern Ireland Secretary Patrick Mayhew told reporters.

Earlier, telephone calls to news organizations in Belfast and Dublin had claimed that the dissident "Continuity IRA" was responsible, but the callers provided no codeword to validate the claim.

The admission ends a policy observed since the IRA cease-fire ended in February to confine attacks to the British mainland, in order to avoid retaliation from militant Protestant groups. Those groups have already indicated they were on the verge of returning to arms — and the British-ruled province to bloody conflict.

The bombings raise the likelihood that pro-British gunmen will break their cease-fire and retaliate against the IRA.

"We're in a grave situation. I don't think any of us underestimate the impact of what happened yesterday," said Michael Ancram, the No. 2 British minister in Northern Ireland.

Ancram joined the chorus of politicians appealing to the province's pro-British groups to maintain a truce.

But Gary McMichael, leader of a party linked to the biggest such group, the Ulster Defense Association, said pressure was building to retaliate.

"There's not much point in holding onto the high ground when your country's burning down around you," McMichael said.

The blasts at Thiepval Barracks, headquarters for the British army in Northern Ireland, injured 21 soldiers and 10 civilian employees. Twelve people remained hospitalized today, including a man suffering from severe burns and a woman with wounds.

The bombings inside Thiepval with its single heavily guarded entrance — seemed unthinkable Monday. The first blast in a parking lot was followed 20 minutes later by a second near Thiepval's medical center, catching the traffic of panicked personnel and medics.

As a bloody gesture against British rule of Northern Ireland the timing seemed obvious: The annual conference of Prime Minister Major's governing Conservative Party, which opened Tuesday in southern England.
